THE MOUNT DESERT WIDOW.

Genealogy of The Gamble Family.

By Greenleaf and Jonathan P. Cilley.

The wide reach of waters, separated from the Atlantic by the white headland of Cape Cod and the black rocks of Cape Sable, named in the recent charts of the United States as the Gulf of Maine, is more mysterious in its conflicting currents, its ocean depths and shoals, and its wide bays and unnumbered islands along its mid-shore boundary, than any other gulf or bay in the vast ocean; while its hidden Georges Bank is strewn with unnumbered dead, more numerous than those contained in the wilderness jungles, where the armies of Grant and Lee contended in the summer of 1864. At its extreme eastern side, the Bay of Fundy stands as the champion athlete in excelling the world's record of running tides; while from Quoddy Head to Cape Elizabeth a multitude of islands and wide estuaries stand unequaled in beauty and extent.

The courtly Champlain admired their charms and was persuaded to penetrate into the depths of the continent by their attractive power. Weymouth, Rosier, George Popham, Ferdinand Georges, De Montes, Bartholomew Gosnold, Martin Pring, all sang the enchantment of these islands: while from these waters also went up the manly cheers of Sir Humphry Gilbert as he and his frail craft sank in the midnight sea, "We are as near Heaven by sea as by land." The beauty of these coasts have even stirred the sluggish blood of the German to exclaim, "Of the archipelagoes sang by the poet, described by the historian and depicted by the painter, there is none which can excell in its union of charm, those 200 of miles of intermingled land and ocean, where lost in each other's embrace, the sea seems in love with the land, and the shore, with the foam crested wave."—De Peyster's Dutch in Maine, p. 44.

Approaching this combination of island, mountain and sea from the southeast, you behold even in the day of calm, a mass of white breakers, that apparently bar all entrance. All the oceanward shores of Great and Little Cranberry islands are fringed with outlying rocks and low points of land, white with spray, while Bunker's ledge and rocks forewarned by the bell buoy, roar with malice, apparently white with anger. At this part of Mt. Desert island in 1740 was the ship Grand Design, of prophetic name, with her precious cargo of 200 souls vainly struggling with the southeast gale. She had passed safely the "Thumper," with noise and foam making its presence known; safely by the long incurving shore from Baker's island to Dead Man's point; with difficulty by Bunker's head and Race point; inside Bunker's ledge, angry and howling, where, frightened by the breakers on Sea Wall point, which extend far seaward to meet them, unmindful of the safe but devious passage now plainly buoyed out, she strove to make the lee of Great Goff, but the Nubbles grasped her keel and the ship Grand Design became a part of the island of Mt. Desert.

The crew and passengers, as they go from the wreck find to the westward —stretching from Bass Harbor Head across to Great Gott an apparent line of breakers—a tidal feature that has since frightened every new navigator of those waters and is a fitting introduction to the mysterious and fascinating Mt. Desert. In fear of this line of turbulent waters, they hug the shore, and half way between the Nubbles and the Head they enter through a narrow opening to the pleasant and safe haven of Ship Harbor. The story of their privation and final rescue can best be presented in the historic words of Cyrus Eaton, the historian:

"It was at or about this time that letters were brought by the Indians from some shipwrecked persons on Mt. Desert, who were suffering every extremity and dying with hunger.The Indians had given them what little aid they could, and now came with letters to this settlement and that at Damariscotta for farther assistance. Measures were immediately concerted by the people of these two places, and a vessel with provisions despatched to their relief. They proved to be passengers from the north of Ireland, who had embarked in the ship Grand Design, of 200 or 300 tons, bound to Pennsylvania, which was driven ashore and wrecked in a violent storm. Most of them were persons of wealth and distinction who were going to rejoin their friends and connections in that colony. Many of them had with them a train of bond-servants, male and female, all of whom, on landing from the wreck, they immediately released and gave an equal chance for life with themselves. After escaping from the wreck they examined the island and found it uninhabitated. Under this discouraging circumstance, they exerted themselves to the utmost to save what provisions and other necessaries they could from the ship. Exhausted by their efforts and fainting with thirst, numbers of them repaired to a brook to drink, and, overcome by the cooling draught, never rose again. Making the best shift for shelter and subsistence which their situation would permit, they dispatched a party of 100 of their most able and vigorous young men to the main land, in hopes of finding a settlement there from whom assistance might be obtained. Nothing farther was ever seen or heard of this part of their companions. The remainder, waiting for their return, spent many wearisome months of disappointment, exposure and starvation, relieved only by the scanty and uncertain resources which the waves and shore afforded. Many perished of want. At length a party of Indians visited the island, and, though without interpreters, a barter was effected of a few articles of food in exchange for clothing and other matters furnished by the sufferers. Among these passengers were a Mrs. Galloway and a Mrs. Sherrer, who had not been long married when they left Ireland. The former of these brought with her an infant three months old, whom she nursed in this abode of wretchedness, till blood instead of milk followed its emaciated lips. Her husband gave to the Indians two pieces of fine Irish linen for one duck, which, refusing to taste himself, he reserved exclusively for her. The sufferings of the mother were such as often to extort from the father a wish that the child might breathe its last. Yet both mother and child survived; whilst the father, as also the husband of the other lady, died from exhaustion. These two women dug graves and buried their own husbands, there being no men of strength remaining to afford any assistance. The vessel that came to their relief brought some provisions, but, as she was for some time detained, these were all exhausted, and they arrived at St. George's in a most famishing condition. Going on shore at Pleasant Point where there was then only one log house, they were received with all the hospitality the place would afford. Many of them were richly clad with the remnants of their wardrobes which had escaped the wreck; but now in the impatience of hunger they were ready to snatch half roasted potatoes from the ashes into lawn aprons and silk dresses, and devour them without plate, knife or fork. .....Archibald Gamble, a young man from Ireland, who had then taken a farm in the Upper town (now the Bucklin lot) offered himself to Mrs. Galloway, and John McCarter of McCarter's Point, Upper Cushing, to her companion before mentioned. Having lost their husbands, whose relatives they were going to join in Pennsylvania, and having no acquaintances there themselves, these two women, whose sufferings had bound them together in the closest ties of friendship, accepted their respective offers and remained in the settlement. They were ever after extremely affectionate and intimate, more so than any two sisters; and though they could never meet without embracing and weeping, it was always a day of rejoicing when either of them came to visit the other. The child of Mrs. Galloway was sent for by his uncle in Pennsylvania, who had taken offence at the mother for marrying again so soon, but she declined the offer till he should grow up to determine for himself. He was afterwards lost at sea." Mr. and Mrs. McCarter left many descendants to be found among the families of McCarter, Young, Rose, Sumner, McIntyre, Whitman, Harrington and others.

Now before we enter on the enumeration of the many thousand descendants of this Mt. Desert widow, it may be wise to refresh our minds with psychological wisdom, to account for the numerous progeny. It is a well known fact of science, that human, as well as animal life, is largely differentiated by the diet on which such persons or animals feed. It it a universal adage that the heavy, ox-like qualities of our brother "John Bull" are due largely to his diet of beef, while the light and frisky nature of the French is germain to their festive frog food, and the sour-krout-eating German swells to aldermanic proportions, making the front part of his waist look like a gigantic cabbage pictured in the advertisements of dealers in that vegetable truck. Now during all the enforced residence at Ship Harbor the only standard diet was the abundant clam; the "succulent clam," for which, and in these identical words, the Pilgrim Fathers gave thanks at their frugal meal. The marked characteristic of the clam is his love of locality, and his fecundity. Now, the persistent and enforced eating of this bivalve during all their long stay on the island, and the constant wonder of his abundance, by some metempsychosis, transferred the distinctive qualities of that animal to those who fed upon him; hence the coming story of the many thousand descendants of that widow, and hence also the eternal prosperity of Mt. Desert as a summer resort, for the story to be told only includes the children of one widow from the ship Grand Design, while the rest, who were scattered along the coast from Pemaquid to Philadelphia, by the inbred love of locality absorbed from the clam, are all impelled by foundational impulses to return to the "locus" of the ancestral clam. It is to be regretted that Darwin did not dig up junks of "the survival of the fittest" from the mud flats of Maine, and that Garner should cage himself in the wilds of Africa, to learn the simian language; while had he built an habitation at the bottom of the sea and listened to, and interpreted the language of the worthy clam, he might have given useful wisdom to the world, or at least taught afresh that "silence is golden," that restlessness is a crime of tramp nature, that deeds, not talk, tell for success. Oliver Wendell Holmes, in answer to the question, "How early should the education of a child commence?" replied, "With his grandparents." We are unable to commence the education of our widow at that ancestral period and in compensation we begin our genealogical story with the father of her second husband, Thomas Gamble.

1. Thomas Gamble[1]. The Gamble, or Gambell (as it is sometimes spelt,) family are from the North of Ireland, of Scotch-Irish descent, and probably resided in Derry County. Burke gives the coat of arms of Gambell or Gamble (Ireland) Azure, a fleur de lis or, crest, a Roman soldier in full costume proper., The ancestor of the Gambles who came to America was Thomas who resided and died in the north of Ireland in Derry county, as his daughter Mary is said to have been of that county. He married Margaret Scott (tradition in the family relates that Gen. Winfield Scott was a relative of Margaret), and we have the names of four of the children who all emigrated to America.

2. Archibald Gamble[2] (6), b. m. 1742 or '43, Mrs. Isabella (Asbell) Galloway.

3. Thomas Gamble[2], settled in Virginia, said to have had children; (Note) we find insulated facts concerning the Virginia Gambles; "Robert Gamble of Staunton, Va., moved to Richmond, Va., some time after 1783. He acquired a large fortune and married a daughter of General James Breckinridge. He left two sons, one of whom became governor of Florida and the other of Missouri. One of his three daughters married William Wirt, another, Chancellor Harper of South Carolina, and the third, W. H. Cabell, governor of Virginia."
4. Mary Gamble[2], b. 1699, m. 1742 William Starrett. The descendents of Mary Gamble under the name of Starrett and others will be taken up and given in full after the account of Archibald Gamble's descendants are completed. We are unable at this time to give the cross reference number to show where Mary Gamble's name again appears.
5. William Gamble[2], b. 1709, m. 1st, Widow Clark; m. 2d, Ann Stark. The descendents of William Gamble will be taken up in their order after the record of Archibald Gamble's descendents is completed. The cross reference number in William's case cannot now be given.

6. Archibald Gamble[2] (2), (Thomas[1]) b. in the north of Ireland, Derry Co. He started with his brothers Thomas and William and sister Mary for America; but on the point of sailing he was impressed into the British service with his brother Thomas. It was some time before he escaped from this forced servitude, but he eventually did and came to Virginia, thence to Londonderry, N. H., thence to Pemaquid, and in 1736 removed to upper St. Georges, now Warren, Me., and located on lot 40, near his sister Mary (Gamble) Starrett. Here he cleared a piece of ground, planted his potato patch, which was manured with rockweed, and built his log-house. By industry and economy he added to his worldly possessions and became one of the prominent settlers, and married Mrs. Isabella (Asbell) Galloway in 1742 or '43, who seems to have encountered many adventures during her life as shown by her experiences on Mount Desert Island and other places.

About 1757 Mrs. Gamble started as a passenger in a sloop commanded by Capt. John Watson, to make a visit to New Hampshire, probably to her husband's relatives there, they anchored near Pleasant Point and the captain sent two men ashore for water, they were seized by Indians concealed there and held as prisoners. The captain not suspecting this, went in his wherry to look for them, he was hailed and ordered to come ashore, not complying he was immediately killed by a musket ball. The only person now left on board was an old man and Mrs. Gamble. When night approached, the Indians attempted to board the sloop, but the old man took his station on deck with what muskets there were on board, and with the aid of Mrs. Gamble who loaded as fast as he discharged them, kept the Indians at bay until they became discouraged and withdrew, and succor came to them from the settlement.

Archibald Gamble was a member of Capt. Thomas Hutchin's company of Rangers in 1755, and after a life of many adventures with Indians and in making a home in the wilderness of the New World, met his death in sight of his home in the winter of 1779, while hauling hay across the George's river; he and his team broke through the ice, and chilled and suffocated by the winter water, died a short time after his rescue. A large rock in the river marks the place of this occurrence and can be easily observed from the cars as they skirt the Georges river below the railroad bridge. He and his wife are buried in the old Presbyterian grave yard, where an appropriate monument has been erected by his descendants.

7. Ann Hey Gamble[3] (13), b. 1743 or '44, m. John Mingerson.
8. Thomas Gamble[3], b. Impressed and died in the British Navy.
9. Mary Gamble[3] (19), b. 27th May, 1746; m. David Creighton.
10. Robert Gamble[3], b. about 1748. He was lost at sea in a snow storm off Cape Ann, 1770, in sloop "Industry," Capt. David Patterson. Every soul on board, thirteen in all, perished and only one trunk and the fragments of the vessel were ever seen. The preceeding year the captain's brother, then of Massachusetts, was cast away at Mosquito Harbor with seventeen persons on board, all of whom perished.

11. Margaret Gamble[3] (27), b. 12th Aug. 1751, m. Nathan Bucklin.
12. Elizabeth Gamble[3] (37), b. 3d June, 1754; m. Lieut. Joseph Coombs.

13. Ann Hay Gamble[3], alias Nancy, (7), (Archibald[2], Thomas[1]). She was born in the old fort in Thomaston, 1713. Went to Boston at the age of sixteen, married there in 1769, John Mingerson (an Englishman who came to this country when a small boy) a cooper and sugar refiner. They were intimate with the family of John Hancock. After the breaking out of the Revolutionary war, they fled from Boston and returned to Warren, where he took up land. Subsequently he returned to Boston, entered the Continental army and died about 1784. She removed to South Thomaston, and died 15th February, 1830 at the residence of her grand child, Capt. Israel Snow. Her remains were interred in the Thorndike burying ground.

14. Susanna Mingerson[4] (47), b. 1772; m. 1st, Capt. Robert Snow; m. 2d, Nathan Pierce.
15. Nancy Mingerson[4] (55), b. 1775; m. 28th March, 1798, Capt. Archibald Coombs; d. 18th August 1819, age 44 years.
16. Betsy Mingerson[4] (67), b. 22d July 1778; m. 9th March, 1800, William Andrews of Boston.
17. Mary Mingerson[4] (67), b. 22d Dec. 1780; m. 23d March, 1799, Daniel Weed.
18. Willeous Taylor Mingerson[4] (80), b. 1783; m. 14th Aug., 1806, Elisha Snow, Esq.

19. Mary Gamble[3] (9) (Archibald[2], Thomas[1]), was born in Lexington, Mass., where her mother had gone for safety during her confinement. She married 19th December, 1770, David Creighton, Jr.; he was born in upper St. George, now Warren, 2d Jan., 1736, and died in Thomaston, 29th Aug. 1811. His father David was one of the first Scotch-Irish settlers and occupied lot No. 39. He was killed and scalped in the war of 1747 near the old fort in Thomaston, by a party of Indians lurking in the woods watching for those who strayed away from the fort. David Creighton, Jr., spent much of his early life on ship board, having been impressed and compelled to do duty on board of a British man-of-war, serving seven years without putting his foot on shore. After his discharge from the navy, having reached the legal age, his father's estate, consisting of two farms, one on the east side of Oyster river, a cultivated farm known since as the Robert Shibles farm, the other on the west side of the river in Warren, uncultivated, was to be divided between the heirs, David and his brother Samuel. The former argued and claimed that as he had always led a sea-faring life, and was unacquainted with farming, he ought to have the cultivated place; to which his brother demurred, saying he had devoted his time and labor to clearing and cultivating the farm and making it what it then was, and that by right it ought to be his. But David persisted in his demands, and proposed to decide the matter by a boxing match, the best man to have the homestead. Samuel, tired out finally by the cool persistency of David, agreed to his proposal, and the preliminaries were arranged. They were neither "to scratch, clinch, or bite," nor "strike below the belt," but have "a gentlemanly box." The bout was a tough one, but David's skill and man-of-war training, proved too much for his brother Samuel, who on being defeated, graciously yielded his claim. David subsequently sold his farm, and bought another near the south-end marsh in Rockland. In his old age he gave the farm to parties on the condition that they would support him during the term of his natural life.

20. Samuel Creighton[4] (87), b. 3d Oct., 1770; m. Susanna Davis.
21. David Creighton[4], b. 18th May,

1772; d. unm. Jan. 1843.

22. Mary Creighton[4], b. 27th Feb., 1774, pub. 3d May, 1792; m. James Gordon of Camden.
23. James Glasgow Creighton[4], b. 7th Nov., 1775; d. unm., 1833, a mariner.
24. Robert Creighton[4], b. 5th Sept., 1777; Enlisted in the war of 1812, and died in service. His heir received his land warrant for 160 acres of land which they located over a bayou in Louisiana.
25. Nancy Creighton[4], b. 11th Sept., 1785; d. 6th June, 1855 in Thomaston.
26. Elizabeth Creighton[4] (94), 11th Jan., 1788; m. Elijah Ripley of Hope; d. 1859.

27. Margaret Gamble[3] (11), (Archibald[2], Thomas[1]). She married 4th Sept., 1770, Nathan Bucklin of Warren, who was born 1741. Came from Rehoboth, Mass., about 1764, and settled in Warren; died there 18th Sept., 1829, aged 88 years. During the Indian hostilities, with the family she had taken refuge in the fort. The Indians killed all of her father's cows, four in number, but the oxen were saved by swimming them across the river and concealing them in Watson's woods, now Brown's. This loss was felt very keenly by them all. Long after hostilities had ceased and while living on her farm, she went across lots to a neighbor, Mr. Counce, for a spinning wheel, on her return she discovered that a bear was following her, instead of dropping the wheel and running, she turned, faced the bear, and using the wheel as a shield, walked backward until she reached her house. She early connected herself with, and was an exemplary member of the Baptist society of Warren. She was an affectionate wife and mother and after a long life of usefulness died 20th March, 1839. Nathan Bucklin was one of the committee of safety in 1778, and on duty under Gen. Wardsworth in 1780 as lieutenant. He came into possession of the original Gamble lot and it is owned to this day by his descendants. The old cellar over which the first house was built yet remains, marked by an apple tree.

28. Nathan Bucklin[4] (104), b. 1771; m. 1st, in 1796, Mary Dunning; m. 2d, Mrs. Bethia Brewster.
29. Elizabeth Bucklin[4] (110), b. 1773; pub. 14th Feb., 1794; m. Capt. Robert Dunning.
30. Ebenezer Bucklin[4], b. 1775; was apprenticed to a paper maker of Boston. He left his employer and was never heard from.
31. Thomas Bucklin[4], b. 1777; went to sea and was lost.
32. Archibald Gamble Bucklin[4], b. 1779; went to sea and was lost.
33. Margaret Bucklin[4] (117), b. about 1782; m. Peter Williams.
34. Hannah Bucklin[4], b. 1784; a spinster who lived a long time in the family of Hezekiah Prince, Jr., in Thomaston. d. —
35. Joseph Coombs Bucklin[4] (125), b. 14th Sept., 1786; m. 18th Aug., 1814, Calista Gardner.
36. Isabel Bucklin[4], b. 1788; d. 20th Nov., 1834, s.

37. Elizabeth Gamble[3] (12), (Archibald[2], Thomas[1]), b. 3d June, 1755, in the old block house or fort in Thomaston, whither the family had fled during an Indian alarm, and where she remained until nearly 7 years old. During this period there was almost continuous warfare with the Indians, who were prowling about the fort, trying to surprise its defenders and capture it. It is related that on one occasion when she accompanied the women as they milked the cows in the enclosure near the fort, the animals were restless and uneasy, scenting the Indians. She observed one of the Indians, who was lying in concealment, cautiously raise his head from behind the log where he was hidden. She had the nerve and presence of mind not to show any evidence of her discovery until the milking was completed and they had returned within the walls of the fort. Then she informed the inmates, who now prepared for a night attack. She related that her mother was always very kind and attentive to the Indians whenever they visited the settlement, to show her gratitude to them for their good offices to her when wrecked on Mount Desert. In cold weather she would build a rousing fire, and always cook plenty of food for them; consequently she was greatly loved and esteemed by them. She was married by the Rev. J. Urquhart, 6th June, 1776, to Joseph Coombs, born in New Meadows, now Brunswick, 25th March, 1752. He came and settled in the "Keag," now South Thomaston, in 1773, with no other property than his axe, with which he worked so successfully, that in three years he was the owner of lands and property on the southwest side of the river, opposite to Elder Snow. He engaged actively in the lime, lumber, mill, salt, and shipbuilding business, and became one of the leading men in that part of the town.

His visits to his sweetheart during the courtship were made under difficulties appalling to those of the present generation, as it was necessary for him to travel several miles through dense forests, cross the Mill creek and Georges river to her log house in Warren, in such skiff or wherry as most of the settlers kept at hand.

Often it would happen that the skiff would be on the opposite side of the river; then he would strip, secure his clothes on his head, and swim across, regardless of the coldness of the water, or the strength of the current.

He early embraced the cause of liberty, and was an ardent and sincere patriot; and during the expedition against Biguyduce, now Castine, he served as first sergeant in Capt. Philip M. Ulmer's company, Col. McCobb's regiment. Subsequently he was commissioned ensign and lieutenant. He died in South Thomaston, 22d Nov., 1817, aged 65. His wife survived him many years, until great-great grandchildren were born unto her, and she could say: "Arise, my child, go to thy child, for thy child's child has a child." She died at her son's residence, in South Thomaston, Dec. 28th, aged 90 years 6 months and 7 days.

46. Asa Coombs[4] (173), b. 28th Aug., 1796; m. 28th Dec., 1823, Lucretia Mann.
47. Susanna Mingerson[4] (14) (Ann Hey[3], Archibald[2], Thomas[1]) b. in Boston 1772; died 26th Mar., 1831; interred in the Thorndike burying ground; married 6th Sept., 1789, Capt. Robert Snow, who was born 14th Mar., 1762, and died 17th Feb., 1803, at Bridgeton, Barbadoes, W. I. They resided on a farm at Thorndike's point, South Thomaston, Me. She married, 2d, 1807, Nathan Pierce of Massachusetts, a teacher, who died in 1808. She spent the remainder of her days in her son Israel's house.

The Snow family, of which Capt. Robert was a member, descended from Nicholas Snow, who came to Plymouth, Mass., in the ship Ann in 1623. He died 15th Nov., 1676. Married Constance, daughter of Deacon Stephen Hopkins, a Pilgrim of the Mayflower. They had five sons, Mark, Stephen, John, Jabez, Joseph, and eight other children. John[2], third son, was born at Plymouth, Mass., about 1633. Moved with his father to Eastham, Mass., in 1654. Married 19th Sept., 1667, Mary Small of that place and had nine children, of whom the 6th child and 2d son was Isaac[3], born 10th Aug., 1683. His son, Deacon Isaac[4], born at Eastham, 1714, moved to Harpswell, Me., thence to Brunswick, and afterward to South Thomaston, and he died, 1799, at the house of his daughter, Mrs. Hannah Hall, in St. George, Me. His wife was named Affion, by whom he had nine children. The 3d child was Elder Elisha[3], b. at Brunswick, Me., 26th Mar., 1739; died 30th Jan., 1832; married 6th Dec., 1759, Betsy Jordan of Cape Elizabeth, Me. He was the first settler in South Thomaston in 1767 and built and run saw and grist mills, and was engaged in ship building. He was baptized Apr., 1784, and on the 27th Sept., 1794, was settled as subpastor of the South Thomaston church, the first Baptist church in Maine, and afterward as full pastor. He is said to have preached in that church without pay for 40 years. He had Ephraim, Robert, Ambrose, Joanna, Elisha and Israel b. in Harpswell, and Isaac, Polly and Larkin b. in South Thomaston. Elisha, 2d, m. 1st, 10th Oct., 1793, Achsah Stetson and had three children; m. 2d, 25th Sept., 1796, Nancy McKown and had five children; m. 3d, 14th Aug., 1806, Lillias Taylor Mingerson and had nine children; m. 4th, 7th Aug., 1831, Mrs. Hannah (Day) Eaton and had two children; total, 19.

52. Israel Snow[5] 2d (204), b. 21st Mar., 1801; m. 1824 Lucy Thorndike.
53. Susan Snow[5] (213), b. 10th Apr., 1803; m. 20th Dec., 1821, William Kelloch.
54. Lavinia Mary Pierce[5], b. 11th May, 1808; d. 31 Oct., 1826, s. She was a teacher.

55. Nancy Mingerson[4] (15) (Ann Hey[3], Archibald[2], Thomas[1]). Born 1774, married 28th Mar., 1798, Capt. Archibald Gamble Coombs (38), her cousin. He resided in South Thomaston, a master mariner. Was elected captain of a militia company in 1810 and promoted to Major in 1812, and held that office during the war in the Fifth regiment under Col. Erastus Foote. (From Eaton's Hist. I take the following: "On Sunday, Oct. 9, 1812, a privateer looking vessel with American colors flying, having been observed lying in Owl's Head harbor three days or more, without any person coming on shore, was suspected to be a British privateer in wait for coasters, and it was now determined to put her to the proof. At evening, one hundred or more men from the shore, Head of the Bay and Wessaweskeag, mustered under command of Maj. Arch. G. Coombs, and took positions partly on Munroe's Island and partly on the main land, opposite the vessel, which lay between the point and Squire Adams' house. At about 10 o'clock in a calm, cloudy night, they commenced an attack with musketry on both sides of her, and with effect, judging from the cries on board. There being no wind, the privateer put out her sweeps, and passed down between the point and the island; at the extremity of which she again caught the nearer and new galling fire of her assailants. She finally escaped, however, well riddled with bullets, as reported by the people of Monhegan, where she stopped and sent a boat ashore for assistance. She was supposed to have been the former revenue cutter, captured by the British on taking Castine."

The following extracts from report on Massachusetts War Claims (1812) show the services of Capt. and Maj. A. G. Coombs and Capt. George Coombs:

"Capt. Archibald G. Coombs' company, from the 22d to 26th June, 1814. Capt. George Coombs' company from the 3d to the 9th, Sept., 1814. Capt. George Coombs' company, from the 20th to the 25th, Sept., 1814. Maj. A. G. Coombs and staff, from the 21st to the 27th, Sept., 1814. Capt. George Coombs' company, from the 2d to the 3d, Nov., 1814.

"In a certificate of Lieut. Col. Foote, on the roll of Capt. Coombs' (Archibald G.) company, said company is expressed to have been called out under said general order, and company orders of 22d June, 1814, there being an actual invasion." "That a British force was off the coast and their barges had entered Georges river and destroyed much property.

"As regards the services of Capts. Coombs' (George) and Spear's (Elkanah) companies, in September, 1814, Lieut. Col. Foote has certified on the rolls of the former, that it was called out by Maj. A. G. Coombs, under the general order of the 3d July, 1812, the enemy's fleet being at anchor near the shore of Thomaston, and attempting depredations with their barges. The company of Capt. Spear is stated at the head of the roll to have been called out by a regimental order, but none such is recorded in Lieut. Col. Foote's orderly book, nor has he certified the rolls; but there is a certificate of the performance of the service from Maj. Coombs thereon.

"The companies commanded by Captains Coombs, Curtis, Tolman, Palmer, Payson and Weed, in Nov., 1814, appear to have been called out by a regimental order, issued by Lieut. Col. E. Foote, on the 2d, Nov., 1814, in consequence, as therein expressed, of 'the enemy's force, consisting of one frigate, one brig of war, and one bomb ketch, being now off Camden, and their commander having demanded of the citizens of Camden the restoration of a sloop and cargo, seized by the officers of the revenue, or the payment of £20,000, the amount of the vessel and cargo; and having threatened in case his demand is not complied with, to destroy the village of Camden and lay waste the whole coats within his command.'"

Maj. Coombs was a prominent Mason and member of the Orient Lodge, F. A. M. On the 28th of Oct., 1818, Maj. Coombs was in command of the sloop Asa, which was built by him and his father, and bound to Boston with a cargo of lumber from Brewer. After leaving Townsend harbor he was overtaken by heavy snow squalls and never heard of afterward. He was last seen reefing by Captain S. Fuller, who sailed in company, and with great difficulty, by aid of staunch sails and rigging, made good his passage. On board of the Asa were the captain and his son of the same name, aged 16, two seamen, and a woman with three children, from Brewer on her way to meet her husband in Boston. His wife died 18th Aug., 1819, and was interred in the Head of the Bay cemetary, South Thomaston, where memorial tablets have been erected in her husband's and sons' memory.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS AT SCHOOL.

To arouse an interest among the scholars attending the public schools in Knox county and the towns in the neighboring counties which lay adjacent and form part of the boundary of this county, the following prizes are offered for the most complete genealogy of any one family, viz. The history of the First Maine Cavalry bound in half morocco and containing individual records of thirty-three hundred men, eight hundred and twenty-seven pages of text and three hundred and seven photogravure portraits of its members, a history acknowledged to be the best ever compiled of a regiment and abounding in facts of value for genealogical purposes. Also three other volumes of records and literature pertinent to that regiment, known as Campaigns 1, 11, and 111, of the First Maine Bugle, Campaign 11 contains many photogravure pictures and nearly as many pages as the history. All these are bound in similar manner to the history and form a very unique and valuable history of the part performed by the Cavalry from Maine. The market value of these books is $13.25, but a copy of a single pamphlet contained in one of them has been sold for $10 to complete a set.

The conditions of the contest are, that each contestant must be a member of some public school in the county or in a town immediately adjoining the county, that the excellency of the compilation shall be determined by the number of names and generations embraced in such genealogy and the least omissions of dates of births, marriages and deaths, pertinent to the persons named in such records, and personal accounts or biographical sketches of each head of families mentioned. The question of excellency and superiority to be determined by a committee of three, consisting of Rev. W. O. Holman, Frank B. Miller, register of deeds in the county, and L. F. Starrett, clerk of courts for Knox county, all members of the Knox County Historical Society. The time limit to such contest to be July 1st, 1896, all papers and compilations of such genealogical records to be delivered to Frank B. Miller on or before that date and the decision of the committee to be rendered as soon after that date as possible.

Three other prizes will also be given under similar conditions or the best genealogical account from any scholar in any public school in each one of the towns in the limits set forth above.

The first second-class prize will be a copy of the history of the First Maine Cavalry identical in every respect with the one mentioned before, except the number of photogravure portraits is less.

The second prize, a copy of the history of the army of the Potomac, by Stine, a large volume of 732 pages.

The third prize, one year's subscription to the Knox County Historical and Genealogical Magazine.

Copies of the works referred to above will be on exhibition in the windows of Dunn & Carr's book and news store, No. 413 Main street, Rockland, and all interested are requested to look at them.

The genealogical records must all follow the arrangement employed in the Gamble family. The necessity of uniformity in this respect will be evident to all.

The teachers in the various schools are urged to give their attention to this matter and start all their scholars of suitable age in the above endeavor. They will be surprised at the interest such efforts will produce in all the other educational work of the school. Attention is invited to the fact that in the contest for the second class prizes, the small towns have a slight advantage over larger ones. If desirous, any genealogical record in the above contest will be type-written for the sum of ten cents per page at the office of the editor. The great advantage of such type-written records is that all the deficiencies in facts and events will be at once apparent, and thus lead to full and correct accounts.

OLD ROCKLAND SCHOOLS.

Primitive Buildings Still Standing And Where They Are.

By Rev. W. O. Holman.

The first money expended on schools in Thomaston, including Rockland, was in 1787. Schools had indeed been casually included among the objects of taxation previously, but no money appears to have been expended. At the town meeting in May of this year, the town was asked to ratify the agreement of the selectmen with William Walsh for keeping a town school for the term of 12 months, he having been on trial for one month, and refused to do so. This vote was reconsidered at a special meeing on the 3d of January following, and again the town voted no. Whether Mr. Walsh ever got any pay for his services fails to appear. The fact was the selectmen did not approve his selection for the purpose. Another teacher employed about this time was Thomas Emerson, a native of Limerick, Ireland, and a man of good education and an excellent penman. A separate tax for schools, £20, was not voted until the next year, 1788. From this time this tax was continued regularly except in the years 1796-7 and 8, when it was omitted from some fancied injustice in the expenditure of previous appropriations.

During these years the principal schoolmaster was an Irishman by the name of Sullivan, an eccentric character, of rare wit and a considerable knowledge of mathematics and the natural sciences as they were then understood. Constitutionally subject to fits of depression, he would fly to intoxication for relief, but between times would apply himself assiduously to his duties, and soberly though sometimes moodily. Having taught the equally eccentric Dr. Ezekiel Dodge, the mysteries of compound interest, Dodge is said to have exclaimed, "If I had only understood this rule soon enough, I would have owned half of Thomaston by this time." Among those who studied under Sullivan were Rev. Thurston Whiting of Warren, H. Prince of Thomaston, James Malcolm of Cushing, all of them along in years, but anxious to perfect themselves in the higher mathematics. Sullivan could be awfully sarcastic to his pupils when he chose. When one of his pupils, a tall, gawky lad with a hump back and stooping form came late to school one day, Sullivan gave him a severe reprimand. "I came straight from home," pleaded the lad. "Straight from home," replied Sullivan with a merry twinkle in his eye, "then you must have got confoundedly warped by the way," and bade him go to his seat.

In 1799 the school tax was doubled, and for the first time a school committee was chosen, consisting of Thos. B. Wait, S. Brown, Ephraim Snow, William Spear, J. Reed, Jere Tolman and William Heard. During the hard times, brought on by the war of 1812, the school tax was reduced to $500, but in March, 1815, the times had so far improved that it was raised to $1000.

In 1825, by a new law of the state, school agents were appointed instead of the former school committee and the town voted that each district should choose its own agent, and that custom continued to prevail until our present law was enacted some three years ago.

It was not until April 20, 1839, that the town authorized the publication of the Report of the Superintending School Committee. Notwithstanding this vote, no report appeared until 10 years later. The reason for this was the refusal to accept the first report carefully prepared by Rev. N. C. Fletcher, at that time pastor of the Universalist church. In 1846 the town voted again that school reports should be published, which has been done ever since.

One of the first teachers in Rockland proper was Rev. Amariah Kalloch, who had come from South Thomaston in 1833 and established the present First Baptist church in this city. His salary being insufficient for a liberal support he taught a school in what was then known as the Barrows house at the North end. The boys and girls of that section had previously attended school at Blackington's Corner, the first district school established in East Thomaston. Jarvis Perry, Sr., was one of his pupils, as he had been at Blackington's Corner previously.

The first school in the Shore Village stood on the Spear lot back of what is now the Spear block, corner of Park and Main streets.

This was the famous old "red schoolhouse" and the youth of 60 years and more ago received their early and their later education within its primitive walls. It was a one-story hipped roof building with the door in the midddle, seats raised around a hollow square in the center with the boys on one side and the girls on the other.

Among those who attended this school were David H. Ingraham and his brothers, Mark, Otis and Orris, the late Captain Ben Haskell, Mrs. B. B. Ingraham, then Elizabeth McIntosh, and many others living and dead.

This building was sold to the late Alfred Keen and removed to the site of what is now the J. Fred Hall residence, South Main street. Keen sold it to William Perry, who kept a little store on Holmes street, and Perry removed it to the rear of his lot on that street. When his store burned down, he removed it so as to have it front on the street. It is now as at that time a dwelling, No. 14 Holmes street.

Perhaps the next schoolhouse in age to this stood on Maverick street. This was long before Camden street was opened and the travel to Camden village all went by the way of Blackington's Corner. The late Dr. Thomas Frye taught school in this building and also Hon. Nathan Farwell. When the Oak Grove schoolhouse, still in use on Camden street was built, this old schoolhouse was removed to Washington street, where it was converted into a dwelling house, for which purpose it is still occupied.

"The old yellow schoolhouse," in which two generations were educated stood on what is now the court house lot, then owned by John Spofford, Sr. When William H. Glover built the courthouse this schoolhouse, then deserted, was used by them for a carpenters' shop, and when the work on the courthouse was completed, they removed it to their present lumber yard and used it for the same purpose. It still stands there just in the rear of George F. Kaler's mill on Sea street. To this school went Mayor John Lovejoy and his brothers and sisters, John Crocker, Daniel and E. Cowan, and a host of others whose names might be mentioned and many of whom are still living.

Probably its last teacher was Mrs. Eliza W. Hewett, at that time Miss Eliza W. Rankin. The old Pine Grove schoolhouse is still standing at the North end and is occupied as a dwelling. The Portland street schoolhouse on the Point is a junk shop, and the late Lincoln street schoolhouse, removed to make way for the McLain grammar school, was removed and re-erected by K. C. Rankin on Main street, near the foot of Rockland street for a storehouse.

OLD POSTMASTERS AND POST OFFICES OF ROCKLAND.

By Rev. W. O. Holman.

Early in the present century quite a deal of business began to be done at Blackington's Corner and the hamlet at what was called the "Shore" was growing slowly into a village. By 1820 the claims of Mill River (Thomaston) as the general seat of business began to be weakened by the rising importance of what was coming to be called East Thomaston, including Blackington's Corner and the "Shore Village."

In 1824 a successful application was made to the government for a post-office at Blackington's Corner which was granted on the 23d of December of that year, under the name of the "East Thomaston Postoffice."

The first postmaster was David Crockett, known at that time as "Deacon" Crockett, because he held that office in the Baptist church which was as yet located at the "Keag." Deacon David Crockett was the son of the first Jonathan Crockett who was born at Falmouth, now Portland, July 2, 1741; O. S., Married Elionia Robbins Jan. 18, 1763; came to Rockland among its earliest settlers, and died April 28, 1829, aged 88 years.

David Crockett was born March 13, 1780; married Abigail Crockett, Jan. 26, 1804, and died June 13, 1854.

He had the postoffice in his own house which stood on what is now Maverick street, a few yards east of the Bird store, at Blackington's Corner and on the north side of the street. The house was afterward moved to give place to the quarry on that side of the street. He was postmaster about seven years. The office at that time amounted to very little in the amount of mail matter received and distributed, and as relatively little in its emoluments.

John Spofford was appointed postmaster April 2, 1831. Andrew Jackson was president at the time, having taken his seat on the 4th of March, 1829. Mr. Spofford was an ardent and confirmed Democrat after what was then known as the "Hunker" sort. He was a shoemaker by trade and his little shop was in what is now John Lee's restaurant in the building owned by Henry Tibbetts on Lime Rock street, one door from the corner of Main street. The shop was a very small affair, only a few feet square, but it was large enough to accommodate both his business and the post-office. Here for 10 years Mr. Spofford sorted and handed out what little mail matter came to town.

Of course what there was came by stage from every quarter, the greater portion, however, from the west, via. Augusta or Bath. The business of the place was not as yet very large and comparatively few newspapers were taken by the people, nearly all of them weeklies, and chiefly religious. Thomaston had its own little weekly, the Thomaston Register, established May 17, 1825. The Maine Gazette had begun to be published at Bath, Dec. 8, 1820, and the Hancock Gazette at Belfast, July 6, 1820. Portland had the Falmouth Gazette and Weekly Advertiser, now the Daily Advertiser, and the Eastern Argus, started in 1803.

The Kennebec Journal, started at Augusta in August, 1823, was the organ of the Whig party. Of religious journals there was the Christian Intelligencer, Universalist, which appeared in 1821; the Christian Mirror, Congregational, (Aug. 1822); Zion's Advocate, Baptist, (1828). The Methodists also had Zion's Herald, and the Baptists the Watchman and Reflector, published in Boston. Of the two or three, and later on the half dozen dailies, which, however, came only two or three times a week, there was first the Boston Advertiser and Post, and when the steamboats began to bring them the Mail, Bee, and Times, and then the Atlas. These last came chiefly through a news agency kept in a little store about where the New England clothing store now stands on Main street. John Spofford held the postoffice the first time from 1831 to May 24, 1841, when he was succeeded by Earl S Hovey.

Mr. Spofford was born Feb. 21, 1783, in Pelham, N. H. He was the son of Thomas and Esther (Pearl) Spofford of that place and came here in 1803; married Hannah Simonton, Sept. 27, 1808, and worked at his trade for many years, but later on combined with it considerable business as a merchant. He left several sons and daughters. One of the daughters, Abby A. Spofford was the first wife of the late Hon. Joseph Farwell. Mr. Spofford was a very industrious, honorable, upright man, and an excellent citizen.

Edwin S. Hovey, who succeeded Mr. Spofford, was a son of Ivory Hovey, a native of Berwick, who came to Warren, married Mary, a daughter of Mannasseh Smith, Esq., of Wiscasset, and removed to Rockland and lived in the old house now standing on the corner of Main and Myrtle streets, and occupied on the ground floor by E. Simmons and Flint's bakery. This was the first two story frame house ever erected in Rockland.

Edwin S. Hovey married, first, Clarissa Reed of Orono, and second, Susan Thresher, and practiced law in Rockland from 1826 to 1832, when he removed to Wiscasset as register of probate for Lincoln county. His residence while postmaster and in fact for years before and after, stood where the Syndicate block now stands, and is well remembered by the older citizens. This house was destroyed in the "great fire" of 1853. Mr. Hovey was a very well read lawyer, a first-rate citizen and made a good postmaster.

Edwin S. Hovey was succeeded June 29, 1840, by James Crockett. William Henry Harrison had been inaugurated president the 4th of March preceding and died the month following. Vice president John Tyler secceeded him. This was the first Whig administration. Mr. Crockett was of course a Whig. He was postmaster only a little over a year. The brevity of his term is explained by the fast that he was appointed to fill out the unexpired term of Mr. Hovey.

The postoffice during Mr. Crockett's administration was in the building now occupied by W. A. McLain, Main street, directly opposite The Star office. Mr. Charles Crockett, Rockland's ex-mayor and present street commissioner was clerk in the postoffice with his father. Mr. Crockett in his active life was a merchant and a leading citizen of the place. He died some two years ago. Besides his son mentioned, Mr. Charles S. Crockett, he left three sons, Hezekiah C. Crockett now of Oregon, John T., of Southwest Harbor, and George A., of this city, and two daughters, Mrs. Ada Freeman of Southwest Harbor, and Mrs. Ellen S. Johnson of Oregon.

Leander Starr's appointment was dated Nov. 8, 1842. Mr. Starr was the son of Rev. Robert Starr, who was born in Bridgewater, Mass., 1779, and Mary (Eustace) Starr. Rev. Robert C. Starr, was in early life a joiner, but became a Baptist clergyman, removed from Bridgewater to Jay, Me., and ultimately to Warren, where Leander was born Jan. 16, 1814. He was afterward pastor of Baptist churches in Friendship, Woolwich, New Gloucester and other places, removed from his last settlement at Wayne to Thomaston and resided with his children there until his death, Dec. 11, 1862. Leander Starr married Clementine B. Keith, and at the time of his residence in Rockland, was a jeweller, and a partner with Simeon Blood in a little building which stood between the old Spofford house and the Commercial house afterward removed to make room for the first Spofford block, destroyed by the big fire of 1853, about where the present C. F. Kittredge dry goods store now stands. Mr. Starr died in Rockland in the house he built and occupied on the southwest corner of Union and Masonic streets, June 5, 1854. Mrs. Starr removed with her son, William to Thomaston, and survived until about a year since. William still resides in Thomaston.

Mr. Starr was succeeded by John Spofford, who was re-appointed, June 19, 1844. This time Mr. Spofford had the postoffice in a small two-story wooden building, which stood where the Kimball block extension now stands, the upper part of which was occupied for an office by Herman Stevens, Esq., one of the ablest lawyers of his day in Knox county.

This wooden building was afterward moved by Mr. Spofford to what is now the court house lot and stood for years just south of the old "yellow school house" on Union street. It was afterward sold to Charles Perry, who removed it to the North end where it still stands. After the removal of this building from Main street, Mr. Spofford moved the postoffice to his old place Limerock street.

Mr. Snofford was succeeded by Gen. William H. Titcomb, Aug. 28, 1850. On the change of name to Rockland postoffice, Mr. Titcomb was re-appointed, but declined to serve as he had been elected cashier of the Rockland bank, a position which he afterward filled for a great many years. The Rockland bank had been incorporated May 1, 1851, with a capitol of $50,000 with the right of increasing it to $100,000 on or before April 1, 1853. The stock was taken up almost immediately by Rockland citizens and the bank went into operation the following October. Gen. Titcomb was afterward elected treasurer of the Rockland Savings Bank, April 18, 1868, and served in that capacity until May 1888, a period of 20 years, when he resigned, and was succeeded by E. D. Spear, who still holds the office. Gen. Titcomb's subsequent history is too recent to need rehearsal. He never again engaged in active business. He survived his two only daughters, Mary A., and Fannie M., but died himself in January, 1893. Mrs. Titcomb is still living.

Halford S. Earle was the next postmaster, and as Gen. Titcomb had resigned immediately upon his re-appointment, as a matter of course, Mr. Earle's appointment dated back to Jan. 21, 1851. Mr. Earle was born in Brunswick, Me., about 1812. He married Elizabeth Barker of New Bedford, Mass., and came to Rockland to reside somewhere along in the last of the "forties." He was a partner with Caleb G. Moffitt in the clothing and tailoring business from July, 1847, to July, 1850, when Mr. Moffitt went out and set up in the same business for himself.

Mr. Earle built and resided in the house now owned and occupied by G. W. Kimball on Maple street. Mr. Earle was postmaster a little less than two years. He subsequently made two trips to California, engaging first in mining and then in the operation of a saw mill. Mrs. Earle and three sons, Henry H., George F., and John B., and two daughters, Annie B., and Clara B., subsequently joined him in California, where Mr. Earle died.

Hezekiah Prince, b. in Kingston, Mass., 7th Feb., 1771, and d. 27th Dec., 1840. He removed to Thomaston 17th Apr., 1792, having worked as apprentice at the joiner's trade for the five preceding years at Vinalhaven, Camden and Lincolnville. Brought with him his chest of tools and clothes, which constituted his entire worldly property and commenced business on his own account. He has the misfortune to lose all his clothes except what he had on, in the month of June following, by a fire which consumed the house of Mr. Tolman, which he was then building and living in. In the winter of 1793 and '94 he took a journey to Virginia on horseback. The journal of his trip was published in the New England Magazine, 1894. He returned to Thomaston, Apr. 8, 1894, and again resumed his business as joiner and painter. In May he removed to Wessaweskeag, engaged work for his apprentices and took a load of lumber to New York. In 1796 he built the Wesseweskeag meeting house, and first bridge, and went into trade.

Removed about the end of the 18th century to Seal Harbor, St. George, where he manufactured salt and extract of spruce, both of which found a ready sale in Boston, Mass. He was the first selectman in 1803 and for many years afterwards, and represented the town from 1808 to 1811 in the General Court. In 1813 the "Bulwark," an English line of battle ship of 74 guns, was cruising along the coast of Maine, and on the evening of the 22d of June of that year sent two of her boats, well manned and armed, up the Georges river to destroy the fort built by the Government in 1809. The guns that had been stationed at the fort had been withdrawn for service elsewhere, and Mr. Prince, who had been left in charge of the fort, engaged an elderly man, Ephraim Wylie, to stay there and keep things in order. The fort consisted of a rampart in the form of a crescent towards the river, upon which were mounted two or three 18-pounder iron guns. Attached to this were the barracks, a small block house, and a magazine of brick, and the enclosure was completed in the rear by a high board fence. When the boats came up this sole defender of Georges fort and river was within doors preparing his evening meal. The enemy scaled the parpet of the fort, and the officer in command, with a stentorian voice, ordered a surrender. No one appearing at the door, the officer ordered a musket to be fired at it; the ball of which passed through the upper panel, and, grazing the shoulder of Mr. Wylie, lodged in his bunk. "Surrender!" again shouted the officer. On this, the occupant sailed out, and peremptorily ordered the intruders from the premises. Not intimidated by the appearance of one man only, however valorous, the officer inquired for the commander of the battery. "I am the commander!" replied Wylie; "this is Squire Prince's fort, and he has put me in charge of it." Others of the force had in the meantime spiked the guns; and the officers, finding no impediment in the garrison, ordered the whole establishment to be blown up. Powder enough for this purpose not being found in the magazine, the little they did find was scattered to the winds, and Wylie was ordered to bring forward and surrender his flag. "I told you once," was the reply, "that this was 'Squire Prince's fort, and if you want any flag you must go to 'Squire Prince." This the officer declined to do, and proceeded with his boats to capture some vessels in the river, and row towards Thomaston, where the hopes of a richer booty were expected. The people along the Cushing shore having become aware of their presence, seized their guns and came down to the bank of the river and opened fire, which soon compelled the retreat of th boats.

On the 13th June, 1814, Mr. Prince removed his family to Thomaston, where he passed the remainder of his life. He was manager of the Thomaston Cotton and Woolen Manufactory and kept a general store at the Creek, was justice of the peace and quorum and dedimus through the state. Selectman in Thomaston from 1825 to 1831. Deputy collector of customs from 1812 to 1840. Pension agent for the receiving and paying out pensions to soldiers of the Revolution. Was a member of the state senate in 1831 and of the executive council.

He was an active and exemplary member of many moral and charitable institutions, and especially of the Baptist church, which he first joined in St. George, having been baptized with his wife in St. George in April, 1808.

His estimable wife was a ready participant with him in all the amenities and charities of social, religious and domestic life. Their home was prized alike by his family and the transient visitor, and the union so auspiciously began here could scarcely be said to have been suspended by death, husband and wife both passing away in the course of a month.

The Prince genealogy commences with the Rev. John Prince of East Stafford, in Berkshire, England, where the church in which he preached is still in existence. His son, John Prince[2] emigrated to this country early, was at Watertown in 1633, was ruling elder at Hull, Mass., in 1644, where he died Aug. 16, 1676; m. Alice Honer; the youngest of his nine children was Thomas Prince[3], m. Ruth Turner, his son Job Prince[4], m. Abagail Kimball; Kimball Prince[5] m. Deborah Fuller, and had Hezekiah Prince.

He was of industrous and moral habits, honorable, skillful and methodical in business and acquired a small property. He frequently presided at town meetings. Served as captain in the War of 1812, as shown in (55). Was Master of the Orient Lodge, F. A. M. His most prominent characteristic was to make peace whenever he found men at variance. He resided in South Thomaston. In the militia of Maine he was commissioned lieutenant Apr. 11, 1811; captain Sept. 1, 1814; colonel June 10, 1817. Was a millwright, shipbuilder and farmer.

CHILDREN.

147. George Coombs, Jr.[5], b. 6th Jan., 1810; s; a truckman, South Thomaston; d. 20th May, 1888. He was formerly known as Dea. Coombs, and in the later years of his life drove the stage from South Thomaston to Rockland carrying the United States mails. In March, 1873, during one of the then too frequent periods, when the muddy condition of the streets gave an uneuphonious title to the city of Rockland, he perpetrated an example of inland navigation amid the cheers of the citizens, who lined the walks of Main street, which was widely commented upon by all the papers in the state and in the country generally. In that species of boat called a punt, carrying the United States flag at its prow, the United States mail amidships and himself at the stern with an oar for a rudder, and his horse acting the part of a baloon jib, he sailed from the South Thomaston line to the Rockland postoffice. The following day amid the enthusiastic plaudits of the citizens of Rockland and the Judge and attendants of the March term of the Supreme Judicial court, the best obtainable silk hat and a most costly pair of riding gloves was presented to the distinguished navigator. The presentataion speech was made by True P. Pierce.

He was a very active and sprightly person of medium height; he held various town offices and was always prominent at town meetings and other assemblies by his impulsive manner and mode of expression. One of his acts as constable in the early part of his life was the seizure made by himself and Ephraim Bartlett, aided by Hezekiah Prince, Jr., the United States inspector of the port, of the schooner Fox for smuggling. This was Sept. 22, 1822. Thirty-four barrels of rum were thus seized, which sold at auction for $651. We find him again in 1830 as one of the prudential committee of a temperance society, organized under peculiar circumstances, but which was productive of great good in his neighborhood. In 1824, Fourth of July was celebrated with an oration and great eclat at the Keag, at which time Mr. Coombs read the Declaration of Independence as his part of the program. He was always a Democrat, and prominent in the councils of that party. Late in his life he removed to Seattle, Wash., and made his home with his son, Samuel, where he died 25th Oct., 1888.

Lucy Woodbury, dau. of Benjamin and Priscilla (Woodbury) Thorndike of Matinic; res. in Rockland. A master mariner. He was born on the farm called "Cherry Tree Point" in Williamson's History. This farm was purchased by his father from Ebenezer Thorndike in 1795. He was two years of age when his father died, and there was a younger child, an infant sister. This large family of eight children were brought up on this farm, which is now occupied by his daughter, Susan, the wife of Hiram Hall, Jr. When about ten or eleven years of age he was out in the bay in the early morning fishing at the time the British fleet passed up the Penobscot to capture Castine. This incident shows his early work as a boy to help support the family. His first purchase was a small fishing schooner, thence attained to coasting vessels and also the foreign trade commanding in all about twelve vessels, being a part owner in all of them, he also was concerned in building vessels in Rockland, as senior partner in the firm of "Snow, Farwell & Co." from 1862 until his death. His father, Robert Snow, died in 1803, from yellow fever, while in command of the same schooner in which his brother, Ambrose, also died from yellow fever, the year before, 1802. He was a charter member of Lincoln Lodge of Masons in Wiscasset, and was the first Junior Warden. The following letter from Barbadoes may be of interest to show the benefits of the Masonic fraternity.

Madam:

This will be handed you by Mr. Saulding.I have taken the liberty by this conveyance of writing you, "tho' a stranger." It is attended with my most sincere wishes, that the Almighty, who gave us being will endow you with that fortitude, sufficient seriously to reflect that the death of your dead husband and my worthy brother is the Will of our Almighty Creator, who first gave us being; and hope through His Infinite Mercy, to fortify you with Perseverance, Sufficient for you to Compose Yourself, and reflect, it is the handywork of our Blessed Maker. Notwithstanding this will or may be the forerunner of unwelcome news, I sincerely wish and hope you will take it in its proper light of its being my duty in the office of a Brother to a Sister. Captain Robert Snow, departed this life on Thursday the 17th of February, about 8 o'clock in the evening. I, the..... ....evening drew up an instrument of writing for.. .....which is hereby inclosed. Attended..... the accounts of his expenses, all receipted..... ..I hope it will give you the consolation..... .. ...experienced th' he departed this life in a strange and foreign country, he had friends and well-wishes, hoping God may bless and prosper you and all under your roof will be the sincere wishes of your sincere friend and brother.

HENRY A. MARLLOW.

Nancy Coombs[5], (60) (Nancy Mungerson[4], Ann Hey[3], Archibald[2], Thomas[1]), b. 17th Sept., 1807; d. 8th Dec., 1862; m. 28th Jan., 1831, Hon Atwood Levensaler, who was born in Thomaston, Me., 8th Nov., 1799; d. 25th June, 1869. He was the son of Adam and Mary (Turner) Levensaler. His father was of German descent and his mother said to be a descendant of John Turner who came over in the Mayflower. In 1815 he was employed by his uncle Borden Turner of Nova Scotia, who was engaged in ship-building, and lumbering as a clerk until 1822, when he returned to his native town and commenced a mercantile business for himself, which he continued until his decease. In 1833 he was elected a selectman and continued to act as chairman of that body for several years. In 1836, '37, '38, '45, and '55, he represented his town in the legislature where he proved himself an active and competent member in financial matters, and a ready and efficient debator. In 1839 and '40, he was appointed a bank commissioner of the state. In 1843 and '44, he was one of the Executive Council, and about the same time he was chosen one of the trustees of the Thomaston Academy and continued as its secretary during its entire existence. During the administration of President Buchanan, he was Dep. Collector of Customs for the port of Thomaston. In 1857 he was chosen president of the Thomaston Mutual Fire Insurance Co., and continued to hold this office until his death. In addition to the foregoing he held minor offices and was a commissioner of the state prison. In all the relations which he sustained, his integrity was unclouded and his judgment reliable. He was an active politician, a Democrat of the Andrew Jackson school, and exercised great influence in his party and town. After the death of his wife in 1862, he led a more quiet and retired life. He was a firm and steadfast friend and an affectionate husband and father.

Important Genealogical Inquires and Records.

Inquiry No. 5:

Deborah Andros, 1730; Dyer's prior to 1775. Elizabeth M. Rowland of Lee, Mass., is searching for a certain Deborah Andros of North Yarmouth, Me., about 1730; cannot find any clue to her so far; wants to find the records of the family of the James Andros who settled and lived for awhile before 1700 in Falmouth opposite Machorth's Island. Also wants the Dyers of Cape Elizabeth, Me., previous to 1775.

Answer in part:

Christopher Dyer, b. ab. 1815, came from Cape Elizabeth with wife and family, resided in Knox county some time and built vessels in Rockland, but removed to Portland. Benjamin F. Dyer, also from same place, was here temporarily, and removed to Portland. Woodbury P. Dyer, a boat builder, was here also; m. Malvina A. Brewster; Aug. 27, 1853, removed to Portland.

Inquiry No. 6:

I desire information concerning Geo. Henry Snelling of Boston, who died about September, 1892. He was, it is believed, a member of the N. E. Hist. Gen. Society. Would like to communicate with near relatives or descendants.

Inquiry No. 8:

Welkins-Points—William Elkins, supposed to be from New England, died in Philadelphia, Penn., 9th April, 1798, aged 47 years. He married in Philadelphia, 10th January, 1774, Mary Points. For proof of parentage of the above William Elkins a reward of $25 will be given. For parentage of Mary Points, $15. Communications must be sent to

J. GRANVILLE LEACH,
733 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Inquiry No. 9:

Rice-Calkin—Samuel Rice, born 1751, probably in Litchfield county, Conn., married Content Calkin, probably of same county. He was a soldier of the Revolution, serving with forces from New York state from 1775 until close of 1780. Knowledge as to his ancestry and that of Content Calkin, his wife, will be thankfully received.

Inquiry No. 10:

Obadiah Wheeler of Concord, Mass., married July 17, 1672, Elizabeth White. Who was she?

Putnam Historical Magazine of Salem, Mass., quotes from a letter lately received: "Resolved White, son of William and Susanna White of the Mayflower, born in Leyden 1615; married 1640, Judith Vassal of Scituate, daughter of Capt. William Vassal. Children: William, born 1642; John, 1644; Samuel, 1646; Resolved, 1647; Ann, 1649; Elizabeth, 1652; Josiah, 1654; Susanna, 1656. Tradition says Elizabeth married Obadiah Wheeler of Concord, Mass."

Answer to inquiry relating to William Moody in November number:

Mrs. John R. Little of 42 West St., Portland, Me., writes: I am interested in the Moody, Thorndike, West and Robbins families of Knox county. In Sibley's History of Union I find he gives the date of William Moody, who was born in York, Me., as March 30, 1766. Mr. Willard Robbins, who married his daughter, Deborah Wallace Moody, and died two years ago, left a diary in which he has William Moody's birth recorded March 30, 1760. I have every reason to suppose this to be correct, for William Moody was undoubtedly the son of Joseph and Elizabeth (Moore) Moody, who were married in York in 1752. William Moody married Patience Thorndike (b. Cape Elizabeth 1767). They were published in Thomaston Oct. 7, 1787, and lived in Lincolnville. Patience was the daughter of Rober and Deborah (Wallace) Throndike. If I can assist in any way in tracing the families I have mentioned I should be glad to do so. My husband, John Robbins Little, has spent some time tracing his family. He is a lineal descendant of the above mentioned families.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

R. G. Carter, U. S. Army, 3218 16th St., Washington, D. C., will pay ten dollars ($10) to any one who will furnish him with the copy of Gen. Thomas Gage's order to Col. Thomas Goldthwait, commanding Fort Pownal, for the dismantlement of the fort, in April 1775, which was enclosed in a letter written by Col. Goldthwait May 8, 1775, to the selectmen of St. Georges, and in the absence of the selectmen, to Maj. Mason Wheaton and Capt. Jno. McIntire, through the commmittee sent to demand his reasons for the same. Original letter of Col. Goldthwaite is now in the possession of Edward Brown, Esq., of Thomaston, Me. (See Eaton's Annals of Warren, Me.)

He will also pay a liberal sum for any letters, papers or accounts, originals or authentic copies relating to Col. Thomas Goldthwait or his family, from September, 1763, to 1779, which may now be in the possession of any descendants of the following persons who were in the garrison of Fort Pownall, viz: Dr. William Crawford, Jonathan Lowder, Joshua Trent, Joshua Fletcher, John Pierce and others, or of Joseph P. Martin, who lived at Prospect, Me., from 1784 to 1850.

REVOLUTIONARY RECORD OF ROBERT THORNDIKE.

Robert Thorndike—Appears as fifer of Capt. Joshua Jordan's company in Col. Jonathan Mitchell's regiment in the Bagaduce expedition July 8 to Sept. 25, 1779, in a Cape Elizabeth company.—Mass. Archives, Vol. 37, pp. 85, 126.

"He acted twice as pilot for Capt. Samuel Tucker of Marblehead, first on an American privateer, chasing Capt. Mowatt, and a second time as pilot of the sloop of war Boston. Was a member of the local militia at Camden." For further particulars see—Locke's History of Camden, Me.

Robert Thorndike, aged 79, from Thomaston; lived with himself. Pensioned.—From Census of Rev. War Pensions, pp. 9.

Robert Thorndike, private and seaman. Annual allowance $24. Sum received $60. Mass. Militia. Pensioned March 4, 1832. Died Dec. 10, 1854, aged 104 years.—From Maine Pension Rolls, p. 121, folio 514.

Mrs. Little also writes that Mrs. Alice T. Johnson of Muscatine, Iowa, whose inquiries in regard to the Thorndike family and William Moody's wife appeared in the November and December issues of the magazine, died Feb. 26, 1896. Her work of compiling the Thorndike Genealogy has been taken up by Miss Effie Maria Thorndike of Concord, N. H.

Inquiry No. 11:

Mrs. Little desires to know whether Capt. George West, b. 1744, who married Mary Chase at Martha's Vineyard and died in Union, Me., Sept. 4, 1809, served in any military capacity during the Revolutionary War.

The Magazine Should be Sustained.

James F. Dudley writes:

My Dear General: I am in receipt of issue No. 2 of your volume of the Knox County Historical and Genealogical Magazine. I enclose you herewith the subscription price for the year and would be glad to have you send me a copy of the first issue and the balance through the year.

You ought to be sustained in the publication of this little magazine. The present generation owes much to posterity, we think, to collect the facts pertaining to our ancestors while they are obtainable. We live so fast in this country that one generation soon forgets another, and such days as these are brought to mind by the diligent work who do the thinking for the masses.

As former residents of Maine, retaining our interest so much in the old state that we have selected a point in Knox county for our summer home, which we hold in very affectionate regard, and inasmuch as Knox county was the birth place and home of my wife until her marriage, we will take an interest in noticing the records of the old families whom we have known in times past. We should certainly be interested in contributing anything to the success of your enterprise that might lie within our power.

Mr. Dudley is a Bowdoin graduate, now vice-president of the Aetna Ins. Co., of Hartford, Conn. He married Miss Nettie S. Read of Thomaston in 1869.

John C. Graves, 32 Board of Trade Building, Buffalo, N. Y., writes:

"I was particularly pleased to receive a copy of the Knox County Historical Genealogical Magazine, for I had been hoping to find just such a magazine printed in your state for I desire to reach our people in Maine. There has been for a long time important branches of our families in your state and representatives of other branches there. One branch from Brentwood and Deerfield, N. H., settled in Thomaston and Rockland, and another branch settled at Brunswick, Topsham and Harpswell. I have followed them both up as well as I can from a distance, but have not them in satisfactory shape yet. I also want to learn about every Graves that lives in Maine or has lived there."

Fred was on the foot ball team of Lake Forest Institute. Both Dave and Fred won nearly all of the prizes on field day at that school. My youngest son, Rufus Hunt Landon Kellogg, yet in his teens, weighs 168 pounds; at the recent encampment he has outlifted the best; his dead weight lift is 1330 pounds. In Springfield, Ill., this fall at the general encampment he took 19 bars of lead each weighing 90 pounds, raised them with his two hands above his head and delivered them three rods away, making 19 trips. There was not a man on the ground who could raise one of the bars once, let alone 19 times. So you see that physical degeneracy has not followed this branch. Two years ago I took the boys to Washington and they have taken 620 acres of timber land in the region south and east of Cape Flattery."

He joined the Baptist church at Woolwich, Me., at the age of 18 years and was an exemplary member of that denomination. He was a Democrat in politics. He was a direct decendant from Dr. Comfort Starr, the founder of the Starr family in New England, who embarked 21st Mar., 1634-5 from Ashford, Co., Kent, England, with three children and three servants in settled in Newton Cambridge), then removed to Duxbury in 1638, where he settled on the property he had bought from Jonathan Brewster. The descent is as follows: Dr. Comfort[1], Thomas[2], Comfort[3], Benjamin[4], Jasper[5], James[6], Rev. Robert[7], John B. H[8]. Mrs. Starr resided in Thomaston for a long time after her husbands death, and in 1850 moved to Spencer, Mass., where she resided with her daughter, Mrs. Erastus Jones until her death, Aug. 19th, 1892. She was surrounded with all the comforts of life, and was dearly beloved by her children and grandchildren, who all resided in her neighborhood.

CHILDREN.

502. John Bentley Starr[6]; b. 5th Sept., 1828; m. 9 Apr., 1867, Sarah Jeanette, dau. of Asahel and Annie (Pratt) Clapp. For many years a mariner, rising from cabin-boy to captain. In 1864 he commanded the ship Ocean Steed, lost off Cape St. Mary's, mouth of the River La Plate in Feb. of that year. He entered the U. S. Navy as acting ensign, 23d Aug., 1864, and served in the South Atlantic Blockading Squadron, in the "Philadelphia," Rear Admiral Dahlgren's flag ship. Was honorably discharged form the naval service 27th Nov., 1865. He subsequently took command of the bark "Lone Star," which was wrecked off Nuevitas, Cuba, 15th June, 1866. Discouraged with sea life after the loss of his second command, he entered the employment of his brother and brother-in-law, E. Jones & Co., boot manufacturers, Spencer, Mass., where he continued in business till his death, 11th Sept., 1885. Deacon in the Congregational church, and prominent in church and Sabbath school matters. Republican in politics. Had three children, 1, Bentley Clapp Starr[7]; b. 19th Jan., 1868; 2, Lewis Prince Starr[7]; b. 16th July, and d. 16th Aug., 1873; 3, Mary Isabella Starr[7]; b. 20th Feb., 1879.

503. Mary Isabella Starr[6], b. 9th Jan., 1830; m. 5th June, 1850, Erastus Jones, son of Asa and Lucy (Dunbar) Jones; b. in Spencer, Mass., 11th Sept., 1825. He is the chief member of the firm of E. Jones & Co., boot manufacturers, among the largest of the kind in Spencer. He is president of the Spencer National Bank, a member of the Massachusetts Senate for 1896, and one of the most wealthy and prominent citizens of his town. He is universally esteemed and respected for his probity, worth, benevolence and hospitality. Mrs. Jones, surrounded by a happy family, and in the enjoyment of ample means, is enabled to gratify her tastes and wishes, by extending to her numerous relations and friends the hospitalities of her house, where the "latch-string" is ever hung out to welcome them. Have five children: 1. Lucy Isabella Jones[7], b. 3d July, 1852; m. 14th Dec., 1881, Charles L. Kingsbury, b. in Francestown, N. H. Settled in Spencer 1873, and in Boston 1879, where he continues his practice of Homoeopathic physician. Mrs. Kingsbury is a graduate of Mt. Holyoke Seminary, Mass., and has developed and perfected her gifts for drawing and painting. Have three children, Alice M. Kingsbury[8], b. 28 Sept., 1882; Edith M. Kingsbury[8], b. 26 Feb., 1884; and Ruth Kings-bury⁴, b. 23 July, 1887. 2. Julia Frances Jones⁴, b. 5th Jan., 1856. In the summer of 1882 she made with her cousin Ellie Starr the tour of Europe. 3. Charles Erastus Jones⁴, b. 9th Oct., 1861; d. 7th Apr., 1863. 4. Everett Jones⁴, b. 28th Nov., 1864. A graduate of Williston Academy, Easthampton, Mass., and Harvard University. A civil engineer; resides Spencer. 5. Mary Prince Jones⁴, b. 31st July, 1867. A graduate of Abbott Academy, Andover, Mass; m. 4th June, 1891, Albert Sauveur; res. Chicago. Ill.

504. Hezekiah Prince Starr⁶, b. 14th Jan., 1832; m. 1st, 30th Jan., 1857, Ellen S., dau. of Isaac and Mary Ann (Goodale) Prouty of Spencer, Mass.; b. 1st Nov., 1833; d. 7th Jan., 1869; m. 2d, 23d Apr., 1867, Ellen E., d.u. of Eli B. and Deidamia (Prouty) Lamson, b. 2 May, 1839; d. 22 Mar., 1891. He entered business with Nathaniel Liscomb, stove and tin plate dealer in Thomaston. Removed to Spencer and entered the employment of A. & E. Jones, and by his energy, industry and strict attention to business became a partner in the firm of E. Jones & Co. Is a member of the Congregational Church, and much interested in church, Sabbath school and temperance matters. A Republican in politics. Have three children. 1. Ellie Starr⁷, b. 4th July, 1858. Attended Wellesley College three years; made the tour of Europe in the summer of 1882 in company with her cousin, Julia Jones; m. 16th Jan., 1889, C. S. Linley, and have Helen Francis Linley⁸, b. 2d May, 1890, and Isabella Prince Linley⁸, b. 1st Nov., 1892. 2. Sarah Lamson Starr⁷, b. 31st Jan., 1868; m. 23d Apr., 1891, Ralph Stone. 3. Erastus Jones Starr⁷, b. 19th Dec., 1869; m. 1st Aug., 1891, Flora E., dau. of Braman N. and Anna J. (Devine) Bemis, b. 15th Aug., 1875, and have Conan Lamson Starr⁸, b. 16th Feb., 1895.

505. Deborah Prince⁵ (140) (Isabella Coombs⁴, Elizabeth Gamble³, Archibald², Thomas¹) b. 6th July, 1808; d. 14th Sept., 1844; m. 4th Apr., 1829, Hon. Jonathan Cilley, b. in Nottingham, N. H., 2d July, 1802; d. 24th Feb., 1838. He graduated at Bowdoin College in the celebrated class of 1825. Among his class mates were Longfellow, Hawthorn, Abbott, Cheever and others. Commenced the practice of law in Thomaston; was a member of the Legislature in 1831, '33, '34 and '35. In the session 1835 '36 he was elected Speaker of the House, and the latter year was elected as Representative to the Twenty-fifth Congress. Was killed in a duel with the Hon. W. J. Graves, member of Congress from Kentucky, 24th Feb., 1838, near Washington, D. C.

The following biographical sketch by Nathaniel Hawthorne was printed in the Democratic Review of Sept., 1838, and gives a wonderfully clear view of the quality and character of the man:

The subject of this brief memorial had barely begun to be an actor in the great scenes where his part could not have failed to be a prominent one. The nation did not have time to recognize him. His death, aside from the shock with which the manner of it has thrilled every bosom, is looked upon merely as causing a vacancy in the delegation of his state, which a new member may fill as creditably as the departed. It will, perhaps, be deemed praise enough to say of Cilley, that he would have proved himself an active and efficient partisan. But those who knew him longest and most intimately, conscious of his high talents and rare qualities—his energy of mind and force of character—must claim much more than such a meed for their lost friend. They feel that not merely a party nor a section, but our collective country, has lost a man who had the heart and the ability to serve her well. It would be doing injustice to the hopes which lie withered upon his untimely grave, if, in paying a farewell tribute to his memory, we were to ask a narrower sympathy than that of the people at large. May no bitterness of party prejudices influence him who writes, nor those, of whatever political opinions who may read.

Jonathan Cilley was born at Nottingham, N. H., on the 2d of July, 1802. His grandfather, Col. Joseph Cilley, commanded a New Hampshire regiment during the Revolutionary war, and established a character for energy and intrepidity of which more than one of his descendants have proved themselves the inheritors. Greenleaf Cilley, son of the preceding, died in 1808, leaving a family of four sons and three daughters. The aged mother of this family and her three daughters are still living. Of the sons the only survivor is Joseph Cilley, who was an officer in the late war, and served with great distinction on the Canadian frontier. Jonathan being desirous of a liberal education commenced his studies at Atkinson Academy at about the age of 17, and became a member of the Freshman class of Bowdoin College Brunswick, Maine, in 1821. Inheriting but little property from his father, he adopted the usual expedient of a young New Englander in similar circumstances and gained a small income by keeping a country school during the winter months, both before and after his entrance at college.

Cilley's character and standing at college afforded high promise of usefulness and distinction in after life. Though not the foremost scholar in his class, he stood in the front ranks; and probably derived all the real benefits from the prescribed course of study that it could bestow on so practical a mind. His true education consisted in the exercise of those faculties which fitted him to be a popular leader. His influence among his fellow students was probably greater than that of any other individual; and he had already made himself powerful, in that limited sphere, by a free and natural eloquence,—a flow of pertinent ideas, in language of unstudied appropriateness, which seemed always to accomplish precisely the result on which he had calculated. This gift was sometimes displayed in class-meetings, when measures, important to those concerned, were under discussion; sometimes in mock trials at law, when judge, jury, lawyers, prisoner and witnesses were personated by the students, and Cilley played the part of a fervid and successful advocate; and besides these exhibitions of power he regularly trained himself in the forensic debates of a literary society, of which he afterwards became president; nothing could be less artificial than his style of oratory. After filling his mind with the necessary information, he trusted everything else to his mental warmth and the inspiration of the moment and poured himself out with an earnest and irresistible simplicity. There was a singular contrast between the flow of thought from his lips, and the coldness and constraint with which he wrote; and though, in maturer life, he acquired a considerable facility in exercising the pen, he always felt the tongue to be his peculiar implement.

In private intercourse Cilley possessed a remarkable fascination. It was impossible not to regard him with the kindliest feelings, because his companions were intuitively certain of a like kindliness on his part. He had a power of sympathy which enabled him to understand every character, and hold communion with human nature in all its varieties. He never shrank from the intercourse of man with man; and it was to his freedom in this particular that he owed much of his subsequent popularity, among a people who are accustomed to take a personal interest in the men whom they elevate to office. In few words, let us characterize him at the outset of life as a young man of quick and powerful intellect; endowed with sagacity and tact, yet frank and free in his mode of action; ambitious of good influence, earnest, active and persevering; with an elasticity and cheerful strength of mind which made difficulties easy, and the struggle with them a pleasure. Mingled with these amiable qualities that were like sunshine to his friends, there were harsher and sterner traits which fitted him to make head against an adverse world; but it was only at the moment of need that the iron framework of his character became perceptible.

Immediately on quitting college Mr. Cilley took up his residence in Thomaston, and began the study of law in the office of John Ruggles, Esq., now a senator in Congress. Mr. Ruggles being then a prominent member of the Democratic party, it was natural that the pupil should lend his aid to promote the political views of his instructor; especially as he would thus uphold the principles which he had cherished from boyhood. From year to year, the election of Mr. Ruggles to the State Legislature was strongly opposed. Cilley's services in overcoming this opposition were too valuable to be dispensed with; and thus at a period when most young men still stand aloof from the world, he had already taken his post as a leading politician. He afterwards found cause to regret that so much time had been abstracted from his professional studies; nor did the absorbing and exciting nature of his political career afford him any subsequent opportunity to supply the defects of his legal education. He was admitted an attorney at law in 1829, and, in April of the same year, was married to Miss Deborah Prince, daughter of Hon. Hezekiah Prince, of Thomaston, where Mr. Cilley continued to reside, and entered upon the practice of his profession.

In 1831, Mr. Ruggles having been appointed a judge of the Court of Common Pleas, it became necessary to send a new representative from Thomaston to the Legislature of the State. Mr. Cilley was brought forward as the Democratic candidate, obtained his election, and took his seat in January, 1832. But, in the course of this year, the friendly relations between Judge Ruggles and Mr. Cilley were broken off. The former gentlemen, it appears, had imbibed the idea that his political aspirations (which were then directed towards a seat in the Senate of the United States) did not receive all the aid which he was disposed to claim from the influence of his late pupil. When, therefore, Mr. Cilley was held up as a candidate for re-election to the Legislature, the whole strength of Judge Ruggles and his adherents was exerted against him. This was the first act and declaration of a political hostility which was too warm and earnest not to become in some degree personal, and which rendered Mr. Cilley's subsequent career a continual struggle with those to whom he might naturally have looked for friendship and support. It sets his abilities and force of character in the strongest light, to view him, at the very outset of public life, without the aid of powerful connections, an isolated young man, forced into a position of hostility, not merely with the enemies of his party, but likewise with a large body of its adherents, even accused of treachery to its principles, yet gaining triumph after triumph, and making his way steadily onward. Surely his was a mental and moral energy which death alone could have laid prostrate.

We have the testimony of those who knew Mr. Cilley well, that his own feelings were never so embittered by these conflicts as to prevent him from interchanging the courtesies of society with his most violent opponents. While their resentments rendered his very presence intolerable to them, he could address them with as much ease and composure as if their mutual relations had been those of perfect harmony. There was no affectation in this; it was the good-natured consciousness of his own strength that enabled him to keep his temper; it was the same chivalrous sentiment which impels hostile warriors to shake hands in the intervals of battle. Mr. Cilley was slow to withdraw his confidence from any man whom he deemed a friend; and it has been mentioned as almost his only weak point, that he was too apt to suffer himself to be betrayed before he would condescend to suspect. His prejudices, however, when once adopted, partook of the depth and strength of his character, and could not be readily overcome; he loved to subdue his foes; but no man could use a triumph more generously than he.

Let us resume our narrative. In spite of the opposition of Judge Ruggles and his friends, combined with that of the Whigs, Mr. Cilley was re-elected to the Legislature of 1833, and was equally successful in each of the succeeding years, until his election to Congress. He was five sucessive years, the representative of Lincoln. In 1834, when Mr. Dunlap was nominated as the Democratic candidate for Governor, Mr. Cilley gave his support to Governor Smith, in the belief that the substitution of a new candidate had been unfairly effected. He considered it a stratagem, intended to promote the election of Judge Ruggles to the Senate of the United States. Early in the legislative session of the same year, the Ruggles party obtained a temporary triumph over Mr. Cilley, effected his expulsion from the Democratic caucuses, and attempted to stigmatize him as a traitor to his political friends. But Mr. Cilley's high and honorable course was ere long understood and appreciated by his party and the people. He told them, openly and boldly, that they might undertake to expel him from their caucuses, but they could not expel him from the Democratic party; they might stigmatize him with any appellation they might choose, but they could not reach the height on which he stood, nor shake his position with the people. But a few weeks had elapsed, and Mr. Cilley was the acknowledged head and leader of that party in the Legislature. During that same session, Mr. Speaker Clifford (one of the friends of Judge Ruggles) being appointed Attorney General, the Ruggles party were desirous of securing the election of another of their adherents to the chair; but as it was obvious that Mr. Cilley's popularity would gain him the place, the incumbent was induced to delay his resignation till the end of the term. At the session of 1835, Messrs. Cilley, Davee, and McCrate, being candidates for the chair, Mr. Cilley withdrew in favor of Mr. Davee. That gentleman was accordingly elected, but being soon afterwards appointed Sheriff of Somerset county, Mr. Cilley succeeded him as speaker and filled the same office during the session of 1836. All parties awarded him the praise of being the best presiding officer that the House ever had.

In 1836 he was nominated by a large portion of the Democratic electors of the Lincoln Congressional District as their candidate for Congress. That district had recently shown itself to possess a decided Whig majority; and this would have been equally the case in 1836 had any other man than Mr. Cilley appeared on the Democratic side. He had likewise to contend, as in all the former scenes of his political life, with that portion of his own party which adhered to Mr. Ruggles. There was still another formidable obstacle, in the high character of Judge Bailey, who then represented the district, and was a candidate for re-election. All those difficulties, however, served only to protract the contest, but could not snatch the victory from Mr. Cilley, who obtained a majority of votes at the third trial. It was a fatal triumph!

In the summer of 1837, a few months after his election to Congress, I met Mr. Cilley for the first time since early youth, when he had been to me almost as an elder brother. The two or three days which I spent in his neighborhood enabled us to renew our former intimacy. In his person there was very little change, and that little was for the better: he had an impending brow, deep-set eyes, and a thin and thoughtful countenance, which, in his abstracted moments, seemed almost stern; but, in the intercourse of society, it was brightened with a kindly smile, that will live in the recollection of all who knew him. His manners had not a fastidious polish, but were characterized by the simplicity of one who had dwelt remote from cities, holding free companionship with the yeoman of the land. I thought him as true a representative of the people as ever theory could portray; his earlier and later habits of life, his feelings, partialities, and prejudices, were those of the people; the strong and shrewd sense, which constituted so marked a feature of his mind, was but a higher degree of the popular intellect. He loved the people, and respected them, and was prouder of nothing than of his brotherhood with those who had intrusted their public interests to his care. His continual struggles in the political arena had strengthened his bones and sinews; opposition had kept him ardent; while success had cherished the generous warmth of his nature, and assisted the growth both of his powers and sympathies. Disappointment might have soured and contracted him; but it appeared to me that his triumphant warfare had been no less beneficial to his heart than to his mind. I was aware, indeed, that his harsher traits had grown apace with his milder ones—that he possessed iron resolution, indomitable perseverance, and an almost terrible energy—but these features had imparted no hardness to his character in private intercourse. In the hour of public need these strong qualities would have shown themselves the most prominent ones, and would have encouraged his countrymen to rally round him as one of their natural leaders.

In his private and domestic relations, Mr. Cilley was most exemplary; and he enjoyed no less happiness than he conferred. He had been the father of four children, two of whom were in the grave,—leaving, I thought, a more abiding impression of tenderness and regret, than the death of infants usually makes on the masculine mind. Two boys, the elder seven or eight years of age, and the younger two, still remained to him; and the fondness of these children for their father—their evident enjoyment of his society—was proof enough of his gentle and amiable character within the precincts of his family. In that bereaved household there is now another child, whom the father never saw. Mr. Cilley's domestic habits were simple and primitive to a degree unusual in most parts of our country, among men of so eminent a station as he had attained. It made me smile, though with any thing but scorn, in contrast to the aristocratic stateliness which I have witnessed elsewhere, to see him driving home his own cow, after a long search for her through the village. That trait alone would have marked him as a man whose greatness lay within himself. He appeared to take much interest in the cultivation of his garden, and was very fond of flowers. He kept bees, and told me that he loved to sit for whole hours by the hives, watching the labors of the insects, and charmed by the hum with which they filled the air. I glance at these minute particulars of his daily life, because they form so strange a contrast with the circumstances of his death. Who could have believed that, with his thoroughly New England character, in so short a time after I had seen him in that peaceful and happy home, among those simple occupations and pure enjoyments, he would be stretched in his own blood—slain for an almost impalpable punctilio!

It is not my purpose to dwell upon Mr. Cilley's brief career in Congress. Brief as it was, his character and talents had more than begun to be felt, and would soon have linked his name with the history of every imortant measure, and have borne it onward with the progress of the principles which he supported. He was not eager to seize opportunities of thrusting himself into notice; but when time and the occasion summoned him, he came forward, and poured forth his ready and natural eloquence with as much effect in the councils of the nation, as he had done in those of his own state. With every effort that he has made the hopes of his party rested more decidedly upon him, as one who would hereafter be found in the vanguard of many a Democratic victory. Let me spare myself the details of the awful catastrophe by which all those proud hopes perished; for I write with a blunted pen and a hand benumbed, and am less able to express my feelings as they lie deep at heart and inexhaustible.

On the 23d of February last, Mr. Cilley received a challenge from Mr. Graves of Kentucky, through the hands of Mr. Wise, of Virginia. This measure, as it declared in the challenge itself, was grounded on Mr. Cilley's refusal to receive a message, of which Mr. Graves had been the bearer from a person of disputed respectability; although no exception to that person's character had been expressed by Mr. Cilley; nor need such an inference have been drawn, unless Mr. Graves were conscious that public opinion held his friend in a doubtful light. The challenge was accepted, and the parties met on the following day. They exchanged two shots with rifles. After each shot, a conference was held between the friends of both parties, and the most generous avowals of respect and kindly feeling were made, on the part of Mr. Cilley towards his antagonist, but without avail. A third shot was exchanged, and Mr. Cilley fell dead into the arms of one of his friends. While I write, a Committee of Investigation is sitting upon this affair; but the public has not waited for its award; and the writer, in accordance with the public, has formed his opinion on the official statement of Messrs. Wise and Jones. A challenge was never given on a more shadowy pretext; a duel was never pressed to a fatal close in the face of such open kindness as was expressed by Mr. Cilley; and the conclusion is inevitable, that Mr. Graves, and his principal second, Mr. Wise, have gone farther than their own dreadful code will warrent them, and overstepped the imaginary distinction which, on their own principles, separates manslaughter from murder.

Alas, that over the grave of a dear friend, my sorrow for the bereavement must be mingled with another grief—that he threw away such a life in so miserable a cause! Why, as he was true to the Nothern character in all things else, did he swerve from his Northern principles in this final scene?

But his error was a generous one; since he fought for what he deemed the honor of New England; and now that death has paid the forfeit, the most rigid may forgive him. If that dark pitfall—that bloody grave—had not lain in the midst of his path, whither, whither might it not have led him! It has ended there; yet, so strong was my conception of his energies—so like Destiny did it appear, that he should achieve every thing at which he aimed—that, even now, my fancy will not dwell upon his grave, but pictures him still amid the struggles and triumphs of the present and the future.

Mr. Hawthorne added the following to his above tribute.

NOTE.

To make the above sketch complete, only a slight notice of subsequent events remains necessary. On the results of the investigation ordered by the House, it is not appropriate here to speak,—further than the remark, that the evidence confirmed, in the strongest manner, all that Cilley's warmest friends could have wished, as to his noble, mild, and generous bearing, in every point of view, through all the stages of the affair. That is all with which we can have to do here. The bearing of that evidence upon the surviving parties we leave to their consciences, their country, and their God. It has no proper connection with our sketch of the deceased; who is now far beyond the sphere of any of those feelings of human resentments, which it would seem almost a profanity to the still sacredness of the spot, on the part of his friends, to bring to the grave where

"After life's fitful fever he sleeps well."

His public funeral, as a member of Congress, was, to the most careless stranger, one of the most impressive, and to his friends, one of the most heart-rending, scenes, it has ever been our fortune to witness. The most exalted tributes of respect and grief were paid to his memory from many quarters. Especially we feel bound to refer to the proceedings of a large meeting in Augusta, Maine, March the ninth, 1838, composed of members of the Legislature then in session, and citizens from various sections of the State; at which a long series of resolutions were adopted, deeply imbued with the strongest feelings on the subject,—for which the reader is referred to the papers of the day. His remains were removed from the Congressional burying ground at Washington, to Thomaston, where they were re-interred with public solemnities, described as having been of the most touching and impressive character, on the third of May. One interesting circumstance connected with that occasion, we cannot omit to rescue from the oblivion of the newspaper columns of the day, by recording it here. On the Sunday succeeding the Saturday on which Mr. Cilley fell, his wife, the unconscious widow of the husband then lying dead, turning accidentally to a particular page in her Hymn book (528th Hymn from Winchell's Watts, of the selection,) was impressed with peculiar feelings which induced her to mark it with a pencil. The recollection of it recurring to her mind some weeks after, caused her to turn again to it; and that was the Hymn, of which the following is a copy, which was sung on the occasion of his funeral. Its appropriateness to the situation of the widowed and heart-broken mother of his orphaned children will not fail to impress and interest every reader:

Far, far o'er hill and dale, on the winds stealing,
List to the tolling bell, mournfully pealing:
Hark! hark! it seems to say,
As melt'ring sounds away,
So life's best joys decay,
Whilst new their feeling.

Now through the charmed air slowly ascending,
List to the mourner's prayer solemnly bending:
Hark! hark! it seems to say,
Turn from those joys away
To those which ne'er decay,
For life is ending.

O'er a father's dismal tomb see the orphan bending:
From the solemn church yard's gloom hear the dirge ascending:
Hark! hark! it seems to say,
How short ambition's sway,
Life's joys and friendship's ray,
In the dark grave ending.

So when our mortal ties death shall dissever,
Lord, may we reach the skies, where care comes never,
And in eternal day,
Joining the angels' lay,
To our Creator pay
Homage forever.

The news of Jonathan Cilley's death produced intense excitement in Thomaston and throughout the state and nation. Public meetings were held in various parts of this and other states. Friend and foe joined alike in the general mourning and in the warmest tributes to his worth. A large meeting was held at Thomaston, March 7, 1838, at which strong resolutions, reported by a committee of 43, were adopted; expressions of the intense feeling of sorrow and indignation that pervaded the community. An ode, composed for the occasion, by Mrs. Woodhull, was sung, and speeches made by L. H. Chandler, Herman Stevens, J. O'Brien, J. S. Abbott, P. Keegan, Beder Fales, S. C. Fessenden and W. J. Farley. The latter said:

"We were always political opponents and professional rivals, but amid all the bitterness of party strife, in all the warmth of professional controversy, our personal friendship was never for a moment interrupted. Mr. Cilley was politically a warm partizan. Of an ardent temperament, burning for distinction, conscious of powers with which God had endowed him, and fearless in the expression of his feelings, it was impossible that he should not make enemies as well as friends. Never was a duel pressed to a fatal close in the face of such open kindness as was expressed by Mr. Cilley. His error was a generous one, since he fought for what he deemed the honor of New England. He said to a friend just before the fatal day, "I am driven to this meeting by a positive compulsion. I have done all that an honorable men can do to avert it. Why should I acknowledge that man (Webb) to be a gentleman and a man of honor? In truth and conscience I could not do so, and still less can I have it so unreasonably extorted from me by force and threat. I have no ill-will nor disrespect toward Graves. He knows it, and I have repeatedly and fully expressed it. I abhor the idea of taking his life, and will do nothing not forced upon me in self-defense. The pretext of the challenge is absurd. I understand the conspiracy to destroy me as a public man. But New England must not be trampled on! and I go to this field sustained by as high a motive of patriotism as ever led my grandfather or brother to battle; as an unhappy duty, not to be shrunk from, to my honor, my principles, and my country."

To indicate the affection in which Mr. Cilley was held by his townsmen, it is appropriate to add, that when his body reached what is now Rockland Harbor by vessel, and was brought ashore, his friends, without allowing the boat to ground, advanced into the water and taking the coffin on their shoulders carried it in this manner the entire distance to his home in Thomaston.

The following poem written for and published in the "Maysville (Ky.) Monitor," March 11th, 1838, besides its strain of harmony and feeling, presents a Southern view which is creditable to the better judgment of that state.:

Lament for the Hon. Jona. Cilley.

And art thou dead and lowly laid—
The foeman's dread, thy people's aid—
And shall no requiem chant for thee,
Son of the bold—the brave—the free?
Thus said the bard, as with trembling hand,
He touched his harp to a solemn sound;
Then soft rose a mournful strain,
As those who weep for the early slain.

Son of the North—of a hero's line—
Why bend they o'er thy lowly shrine?
Why stand these mourners in mute array,
With weeds of woe in sad display,
While many a chieftain, tall and true,

With tears thy early fall bedew,
And silent awe and gloomy shades,
O'er the vast multitude pervades?

Why waits that lady, so sad and alone,
In her bower atar, her loved one's return?
The dew drops of sorrow are seen in her eyes—
The swell of emotion is heard in her sighs—
Ah! in vain lovely lady, shalt thou listen to hear
His accents of fondness to fall on thine ear,
In the hall of his fathers his footsteps on more—
He lies a pale corpse on a far distant shore.

Fell he in battle, as his fathers had done?
Or fell he in phalanx, the gallant among?
Ah! as for the story—too tragic to tell.
How the young and the noble so fatally fell:
Too honest to falter—too proud to deny—
Too brave to act craven, or dastardly fly;
His truth or his valor he never could yield,
A martyr to honor—he sank on the field.

506. Greenleaf Cilley[6], b in Thomaston, Me., Oct. 27th, 1829. He attended the school of the Rev. Mr. Parkhurst of Standish, Me. for one year, subsequently the Bath High school; was appointed as midshipman in the U. S. Navy, Feb. 26th, 1841, and was ordered to the frigate "Cumberland," Sept., 1843, sickness prevented his sailing in the vessel, which he subsequently rejoined by order of the Navy Department in Naples, Italy. He served in the Cumberland and sloop of war "Plymouth" in the Mediterranian Squadron until Nov., 1845, and in the Plymouth on the Brazil station returning to New York in Oct., 1846, and was ordered to the Naval school at Annapolis, Md. After a month's sojourn there, he sought for and obtained orders for the seat of war in the Gulf of Mexico in the line of battle ship "Ohio," 84 guns, was at the Naval battery near Vera Cruz before and after the capitulation. Assisted the army division at the crossing of the Medelin river on its march to and from Alvarado, was in the expedition to Tuspan, Mexico, and at its capture, being slightly wounded while storming the shore battery nearest the town. Detached from the Ohio and ordered to the Naval academy, reporting there Jan., 1848. Graduated as passed midshipman the following July, and received three months leave of absence. At its expiration joined the frigate Raritan and served in it on the Home and Gulf station until detached in April, 1850. After three months leave, ordered to the transport "Fredonia," and conveyed from New York to Benicia, Cal., a battalion of the Fourth Infantry. Made acting master in Calleo, Peru, and served as such till joining the frigate St. Lawrence at Valparaiso, Chili, when he was appointed acting lieutenant in March, 1852, and finished the cruise in this frigate, returning to Norfolk, Va. in the spring of 1853. After a short leave was ordered to the store-ship Lexington and made the trip to Spezzia, Italy, returning to New York in Dec., 1853. As soon as detached, ordered to the coast survey steamer Jefferson and left Philadelphia, Feb., 1854 for San Francisco, Cal. on the 25th May of that year when about 120 miles from Penguin Island, Patagonia, and the third day of a heavy gale of wind, the vessel broached to and the masts were cut away to right her, fortunately the following night the gale broke, and the steamer the following day reached Sea Bear bay and later Port Desire river, Patagonia. Here she was surveyed and condemned as unseaworthy. The captain, officers and crew took passage in the French bark "Aristide" to Montevideo, and from there were transferred to the store-ship Relief and conveyed to New York, arriving there Nov. 1854. Shortly after was ordered to the steamer "Legare" and served till June, 1855, surveying the Florida reef and keys. Joined the sloop of war "Saratoga" in Aug. as acting master, promoted to master, Sept. 14th, and to lieutenant, Sept. 15th, 1855. Served the entire cruise in the "Saratoga," and was in the affair at Graytown, Nicaragua, when Walker and his filibusters were captured. After a short leave of absence, joined the coast steamer Hetzel and surveyed in the North Carolina sound and Chesapeake bay until Nov., 1858, when was detached and ordered to the steamer Metacomet, fitting out for the Paraguay expedition at Pensacola, Fla., took passage to her in the steamer Arctic, arrived in Montevideo in the spring of 1859, and shortly after was ordered to the brig Dolphin and served in her until re-ordered to the steamer Pulaski, (name changed from Metacomet). Served in this steamer as watch, executive officer, lieutenant commander and senior officer of the station, except an intermission of a few months in 1861, when attached to the frigate Congress, until she was sold in Jan., 1863. Promoted to lieutenant commander, 16th July, 1862. Took passage with his wife and child in the bark John Wesley and arrived in New York in June, 1863. As soon as his accounts were settled as acting paymaster, took a trip to Niagara Falls, Thousands Islands, Montreal, Quebec, Saguenay, and White Mountains, at which latter place he received orders to the gunboat Unadilla, South Atlantic Blockading Squadron, taking pasage from Boston to Charleston, S. C. in the steamer Circassian. After a short time in command of the Unadilla at Port Royal, was ordered to command the monitor Catskill off Charleston, S. C., and was engaged in blockading the inner harbor, and at times cannonading Fort Sumpter. In Jan., 1864 returned North, his daughter having died the previous month. In March, ordered to the steamer Fort Jackson and served in the North Atlantic Blockading Squadron off Wilmington, N. C. In a few months was ordered to the line of battle ship "New Hampshire," and took her from Portsmouth, N. H. to Port Royal, S. C., returning in the "Vermont." In August, was ordered to the "Colorado" steam frigate as executive officer; served in the North Atlantic Squadron until detached in Nov., 1864. Placed on the retired list 18th March, 1865. Promoted to commander 12th May, 1867. In May, 1866 he embarked with his wife and son in the bark "Ocean Pearl" and went to Montevideo, Uryguay, where he engaged in raising sheep on the Estancia, Esmeralda, near Mercedes. On the breaking out of a revolution removed with his family to Buenos Ayres and resided in the city for a while, then moved to San Isidro, where he resided several years, a part of which time he cruised about the Delta of the Parana in the Chalana Luisa. At the close of the Paraguayan war, he navigated from Montevideo to Rio de Janeiro and back, the steamer Villette, and subsequently commanded the steamer Angostura from Asseneion, Paraguay to Colonia, Uruguay. In July, 1871 he ascended the Parana and Paraguay rivers to Corumba, Brazil, and at that place engaged and fitted out a party of five men, with whom he descended to the mouth of the river Negra, and was four months exploring the wilds of the Bahia Negra. Returned to Corumba and paid off his men, and in Jan., 1875, left for Central Bolivia, passing through Santiago, San Jose and Eguez, towns of Chequitos and Santa Cruz de la Sierra, Samapata, to Sucre, one of the capitals of Bolivia. For many months he was employed making plans and estimates, and seeking from the Bolivian Congress the concession of a railway from Bahia Negra to Santa Cruz de la Sierra. Congress finally passed a bill authorizing the Supreme Government to make terms, but before they could be executed a revolution occurred and nothing could be done. He then proceeded on to the Pacific ocean via Misque, Cochabamba, Oruro, Tacna and Arica, where he took steamer to Valparaiso, and from that port embarked in the P. M. S. "Aconcagua" for 1875. For many months engaged in bringing up the results of his surveys. Embarking in March, 1876 with his eldest son, Jonathan for the U. S. and remained there eight years.

Captain Cilley returned to Buenos Ayres in Jan., 1884 and resided in the capital several years, moving to the town of "Nueve de Julio" in 1891, and to La Plata, Feb., 1893. In June the same year came with his son, Joseph, via Southampton and London to the United States and visited the Columbian World's Fair Exposition at Chicago, Ill., and his relatives. Returned to Buenos Ayres in April, 1894, and is now residing at San Isidro in that province. Married in Montevideo, Uruguay, S. A., 13th May, 1861, Malvina, dau. of Gov. Luis and Maria (Saez) Vernet of Buenos Ayres, b. 5th Feb., 1830, in the Malvina Islands, otherwise called Falkland Islands. Gov. Vernet was b. in Hamburg, Ger.; lived eleven years in Philadelphia, and from there went to South America and married and established himself in business in Buenos Ayres. He was civil and military governor of the Malvina Islands in 1829-'31, when his colony was destroyed by Captain Duncan, commanding the U. S. sloop of war, Lexington, subsequently the English government seized his possessions and have held them ever since by the right of force. Has six children. 1. Maria Prince Cilley[7], b. in Montevideo, S. A., 17th Feb., 1862; d. in Brooklyn, N. Y., of scarlet fever 4th Dec., 1863. Her remains were removed to the family tomb, Thomaston, Me.; 2. Jonathan Vernet Cilley[7]; b. in Brooklyn, N. Y., 17th Nov., 1863; graduated from the Maine State College as B. C. E. in the class of 1883. Returned to Buenos Ayres, S. A. in 1883, and immediately entered the employ of the Provincial Government of Buenos Ayres as an assistant engineer, and has been engaged on the construction of railways from Buenos to La Plata, La Plata to Magdalena, Nueve de Julio to Trenque Lauquen, and Bragado to Lincoln, in the construction of these two last roads he was the superintending engineer. He surveyed the route for railways from Trenque Lauquen to Guamini, and Trenque Lauquen to Touay. Was inspector general of the Provincial Railway, and Sectional Engineer of section three and four Western Railway; 3. Luis Vernet Prince Cilley[7]; b. in Mercedes, Uruguay, 7th March, 1867. Came to the United States in 1882 and entered the Maine State College, graduating as B. C. E. in the class of 1887. Returned to Buenos Ayres in 1887 and entered the railway employ of the Provincial government as draughtsman, rose to be sectional engineer and chief of section one, at La Plata. Was on the construction of the line from Nueve de Julio to Trenque Lauquen as first assistant engineer. At the present time is one of the commissioners to survey the boundary between Chili and Argentina; 4. Joseph Saez Cilley[7]; b. in Buenos Ayres, 24th Nov., 1869. He graduated as an agricultural engineer from the college of the Provincial Government at Buenos Ayres at Santa Catalina and was employed in the ministry of public works as inspector of colonies. In June, 1893, the Government of Buenos Ayres sent him to the United States with six months leave to study and report upon the agricultural colleges and systems, and the agricultural department of the exhibition at Chicago. He returned to La Plata in Jan., 1894: 5 Debora Malvina Cilley[7]; b. in Buenos Ayres, 30th June, 1871; m. in Buenos Ayres, 7th April, 1890, Rafael, son of Emilio and Elena (Elizalde) Gimenez. He is in the firm of Gimenez & Posada, auctioners, Buenos Ayres; res. 439 Calle Charcas and has three children, Rafael Gimenez[8]; b. in Buenos Ayres, Jan. 6, 1891; Elena Malvina Gimenez[8]; b. in Buenos Ayres, May 30th, 1892; Raul Gimenez[8] b. in Buenos Ayres, Sept. 24th, 1893; 6, Malvina J. Cilley[7]; b in Buenos Ayres, 30th Nov., 1873; res. San Isidro.

507. Jane Nealley Cilley[6]; b. 31st July, 1831; d. 19th May, 1836.

508. Bowdoin Longfellow Cilley[6]; b. 1st Sept., 1833; d. 25th June, 1834.

509. Jonathan Prince Cilley[6]; b. 29th Dec., 1835; m. 10th Oct., 1866, Caroline A., b. 22d Nov., 1842, dau. of Warren and Sophia (Thurber) Lazell[6] of Brooklyn, N. Y. The Lazell genealogy commences with John Lazell[1], Hingham, 1647; m. 29th Nov., but another record says 22d Dec., 1649, Elizabeth, dau. of Stephen Gates, was freeman, 1837. His will of Sept. 2d, 1695, was proved 16th Jan., 1700. Had eleven children, the third was Joshua Lazell[2]; b. 17th Nov., 1654; d. 12th Feb., 1688; m. 31st Jan., 1681, Mary, of Hingham. His wife Mary had administration on the estate 28th Apr., 1691; had Joshua Lazell[3], b. 15th Nov., 1686, at Duxbury; (another generation may intervene) Joshua Lazell[4]; b. 1751; d. 3d Dec., 1832. He came from Hingham to Mendon, where he died; m. Lovinia Cook; b. 21st Dec., 1760, who d. in Mendon, 29th Mar., 1845, age 84 years, 3 months, and 8 days. He served in the Revolutionary war and at the battle of Bunker Hill, was a man of strong mind and eminent piety. Had five children, the third was Daniel Lazell[5]; b. 6th Apr., 1781, and d. 8th Feb., 1862; he res. in Billingham; m. Betsey, dau. of Amos and Hannah (Hill) Ellis, and had Warren Lazell[6]. Jonathan P. graduated at Bowdoin college in 1858, and admitted to the bar, Knox County, 1860. Commenced the practice of law in Thomaston in partnership with Lysander Hill also Bowdoin, 1858. His war record can best be presented by quoting the following from the official Report of the Adjutant General for the year 1864-5:

"At the first call for volunteers, and before the 3d of May, 1861, Jonathan P. Cilley enlisted 150 men for a light field battery, H. B. Humphrey, of Thomaston, offering to give the six guns required, provided that the State would complete the equipment of the battery. The War Department declined the offer on the ground that infantry only was needed at that time. When, however, it was known that cavalry also was to be raised in Maine, Mr. Cilley enlisted, and his name stands first on the rolls, under date Sept. 3d, 1861. He was subsequently made captain of Co. B, raised by him in the counties of Knox and Waldo, of which he remained in command until he was severely wounded in his right arm and shoulder, and taken prisoner at Middletown, Va., during the retreat of Gen. Banks from the Shenandoah Valley, May 24th, 1862.

"A short time after this misfortune, he received the commissionof Major, bearing date April 14th, 1862.

"After being disabled by his wound for several months, Major Cilley was ordered by the War Department, April 1st, 1863, to report to Gen. John H. Martindale, Military Governor of Washington, for special duty, and on the 7th was assigned to duty as Judge Advocate and Examining Officer at the Central Guard House. He remained on this duty until Aug. 1st, when, although his wound was still unhealed, he again took the field and remained with his regiment until June 24th, 1864, when he was once more wounded. He again reported for duty Sept. 24th, and took command of the regiment, having been promoted and mustered Lieut. Col., to rank from June 6th, 1864. From this time until it was finally discharged and paid at Augusta, Colonel Cilley was constantly present with, and in command of his regiment.

"He was further promoted Brev. Col. U. S. Vols., to rank from March 13th, 1865, for "distinguished and meritorious service during the war"; and was still further promoted Brev. Brig. Gen. U. S. Vols., to rank from June 12th, 1865, for highly distinguished service at Dinwiddie Court House, Farmville and Appomattox Court House.

The history of a regiment that has been specially complimented by Gen Sheridan, and is authorized to bear the names of three more battles upon its standard than any other regiment of the army of the Potomac, is the best evidence of Gen. Cilley's efficiency as a soldier; whilst the fact that two of its bloodiest and hardest contested battles, Boydton Plank Road and Dinwiddie Court House were fought under his immediate command, attest his success as a soldier.

"In his regiment, Gen. Cilley was the first man that enlisted, the first man wounded, and nearly the last mustered out. He was wounded a third time at Dinwiddie Court House but kept with his regiment."

The First Maine Cavalry is shown in Fox's book of regimental losses as having lost more men and more officers killed or mortally wounded in battle than any other cavalry regiment in the armies of the armies of the United States. It was at the extreme front during the night before and the memorable morning of April 9th, 1865, and held the enemy at bay till the Fifth and Twenty-fourth Army Corps were in position, in this endeavor its losses in killed and wounded on that day exceeded that of any other regiment present. At the close of the war he was with Judge O. G. Hall in the law business for a while. He was a member of the Maine Legislature in 1867, Deputy Collector of Customs at Rockland, Me., from 1867 to 1871, member of City Council, 1873-1875, Commissioner of the U. S. Circuit Court from 1867 to 1880, Adjutant General of Maine, 1876, '77 and '78; member of Maine Historical Society and corresponding member of the New Hampshire Historical Society; res. Rockland; had two children.

I. Grace Thurber Cilley[5]; b. 2d Nov., 1867; m. 12th Sept., 1893, Walter Greenough Tibbetts, b. 26th Sept., 1860, son of Alpheus Chandler and Elizabeth (Farrow) Tibbetts; res. San Francisco, Cal. 2, Jonathan Prince Cilley[5], b. 3d Nov., 1868, Bowdoin College, 1891, Harvard University, 1893; d. 17th Oct., 1894. The following notice of his life is taken from the obituary record of Bowdoin College; He was prepared for college at the Rockland High School. He was prominent and popular throughout his college course being president of his class in Freshman year, commodore of the navy, a member of the college crew that rowed with Cornell and Harvard, and president of the college

Young Men's Christian Association. After graduating with honor, he joined the Bowdoin expedition to Labrador, which he described in an interesting series of letters. On his return he entered the Harvard Law School. In 1893, he began work as a lawyer in the office of Butler, Stillman & Hubbard of New York City, and while engaged in looking after an admiralty case at Savanah, Georgia, he was taken ill. Returning to Brooklyn, N. Y., he underwent a hospital operation for appendicitis, and the following month came to Rockland for recuperation. He had started to resume work, when he was attacked by typhoid fever in Boston at his cousin's, George E. Cilley's, and after a long illness died there 19th Oct, 1894.

"We cannot designate his equal as an 'all around' young man, who, from inherited qualities of head and heart, from a remarkable physique, a trained mind, a wholesome, elevated Christian character, a personality that charmed and one whom powerful friends, a heart devoid of guile, seemed destined to win renown such as many strive after but few attain."

510. Julia Draper Cilley[6], b. 20th Dec., 1837; m. 27th Jan., 1861, Ellis Draper, son of Rev. Jonathan Ellis and Julia Ann (Draper) Lazell of Spencer, Mass; b. 7th May, 1832, and d. in Rockland, Me., 13th Feb., 1875. He enlisted 28th May, 1861, in the Thirty-ninth New York vols. (Garibaldi guard) and was mustered in as quarter-master sergeant of the regiment 6th June, 1861. Was commissioned first lieutenant and quartermaster of his regiment 14th Sept., 1861, with rank from 28th Aug., 1861; he served as lieutenant and quarter-master in the Garibaldi Guards, and was captain and quarter-master on the staff of Gen. Stahl's brigade. Subsequently he was in business in New York and Philadelphia, until stricken down with paralysis, when he was moved to Rockland, and d. 13th Feb., 1875. Has three children, 1. James Draper Lazell[7], b. 16th April, 1867; graduate of Maine State College, 1887, B. M. E.; resided for a time in Roanoke, Va., and invested in large enterprises in that city; now at Philadelphia, Pa.: 2, Ellis Warren Lazell[7], b. 11th Oct., 1869, graduate of Worcester Polytechnic Institute, completing his special chemical studies in Germany; 3. Theodore Studley Lazell[7], b. 25th Aug., 1871, graduate of Bowdoin, 1892; res. for a time in Roanoke, Va., now in Philadelphia, Pa.

The Mayflower.

A large number of families in Knox county claim descent from the Pilgrim Fathers who come over in the Mayflower. There were one hundred and two persons who came over, one of the number died on the passage and one named Oceanus White was born while on the ocean and thus the same landed that embarked. Here are their names and the number in each family: John Carver 8; Wm. Bradford2; Ed. Winslow 5; William Brewster 6; Isaac Allerton 6; Miles Standish 2; John Alden 1; Sam. Fuller 2; Chr. Martin 4; Wm. Mullins 5; Wm. White 5; Rd. Warren; John Howland*; Stephen Hopkins 8; Ed. Tilley 4; J. Tilley 3; Francis Cook 2; Thomas Rogers 2; Thomas Tinker 3; John Ridgdale 2; Edward Fuller 3; John Turner 3; Francis Eaton 3; James Chilton 3; John Crackson 2; John Billington 4; Moses Fletcher 1; John Goodman 1; Degory Priest 1; Thomas Williams 1; Gilbert Winslow 1; Ed. Margeson 1; Peter Brown 1; R. Britteridge 1; Geo. Soule*; Ed. Clarke 1; Rd. Gardiner 1; John Allerton 1; Thomas English 1; Ed. Doty*; Rd. Leister*. The four marked with a star were servants, the last two being servants of Hopkins and are included in his family numerically. These servants were not very good pilgrims fathers for we find that Doty and Leister on the 18th day of June, 1821, were tried for fighting a duel with sword and dagger, and were adjudged by the whole company to have their heads and feet tied together and so to lie for twenty-four hours, without meat or drink. The country did not apparently suit Leister, who, as soon as his time was out, removed to Virginia. The condition of the Pilgrims at the close of the winter is thus graphically and pathetically set forth by Bradford in one of his letters written at the time: "That which was most sad and lamentable was, that in two or three months time half of their company died. That, of one hundred and odd persons, scarcely fifty remained. And of these in the time of most distress, there was but six or seven sound persons, who, to their great commendations be it spoken, spared no pains, night nor day, but, with abundance of toil and hazard of their own health, fetched them wood, made them fires, dressed them meat, made their beds, washed their loathsome clothes, clothed and unclothed them; in a word, did all the homely and necessary offices for them, which dainty and queasy stomachs cannot endure to hear named; and all this willingly and cheerfully, without any grudging in the least, showing herein their true love unto their friends and brethren." Only twenty men of the Mayflower company survived the first winter. We give an account of some of these survivors from whom a portion of the Gamble descendents claim descent:

Turner Humphrey[1], b. and m. Lydia Gamea in England; he d. 1673, aged 80 years, and his wife died before in Scituate, Mass., had John[2], m. 12th Nov., 1645, Mary, dau. of Jonathan and Lucretia Brewster; Mary b. in Holland, probably, and had Ruth[2]; m. 1685, Thomas Prince.

Elder William Brewster[2], son of William[1], probably, b. 1563 (may be earlier) in Scrooby, Nottinghamshire, iam[1]. He was partly educated at Cam- Eng. Came in the Mayflower, 1620, with his wife, two younger sons and wife of the eldest and her son Wilbridge university. After honorable service with Davidson, secretary to Queen Elizabeth; he abandoned political life, 1587, and devoted himself for many years to religion. He was the first prominent layman who rejected conforming to the ceremonies of the Church of England. He was postmaster before Apr., 1594 at Scrooby, there he m. Mary. About 1607 or 1608, with Bradford, who was afterward governor, he passed into Holland, and was ruling elder of the church at Ley den, of which James Robinson was teacher, as he had been probably at Scrooby. His daughters, Patience and Fear, came to America, 1623; and 5th Aug., 1624, Patience m. Thomas Prince, afterward governor. He had early removed to Duxbury and d. 16th Apr., 1643. Letters of administration, granted to his sons, Joseph and Love. Jonathan[3] William[2], William[1], Plymouth, b. at Scrooby in county Nottingham, 1593, was educated by his glorious father in his native land and during the dozen years he resided in Holland, where he was left by the Elder to take care of his two sisters with his own family. Without his sisters he came in the Fortune, 1621. In June, 1636, was in command of the Plymouth trading house on Conn. river, removed to Duxbury and elected representative, 1639, the earliest assembling of deputies in that colony, thence to New London, before Sept., 1659 when he was selectman. By wife Lucretia he had eight children, the second was Mary, m. 12th Nov., 1645, Jonathan Turner, Scituate. An extract from the Getingsbock, 25th June, 1609 Leyden, gives the age of William Brewster 42, (b. 1567) Mary 40 (b. 1569) and Jonathan 16 (b. 1593. Plymouth Colony records, p. 94, vol 4, shows John Turner and Mary Brewster m. the 11th Nov., 1645. Mitchell's Bridgewater, p. 361, states William Brewster, b. 1560, his wife name unknown, d. between 1623 and 1627; he d. 16, Apr., 1644, age 84. Had Jonathan, Love, Wrestling, Patience and Fear. Jonathan by his first wife, Lucretia, had William, Mary, Jonathan and Benjamin. Removed from Duxbury to Norwich, Conn., after 1748 with his wife and sons. Steele's life of Brewster, says: "Elder William b. ab. 1560, was at Cambridge, England, long enough to take a degree, probably entered the service of Mr. Davidson in the summer of 1585, and attended him in the embassy to the Low Countries. In 1587, Davidson was imprisoned and fined; Brewster bidding adieu to court life went to Scrooby, Nottinghamshire, and was given the office of postmaster of Scrooby, which he retained until 1607. He is supposed to have m. 1594, Mary. In the summer of 1608 he arrived in Amsterdam, Holland, and in 1609 to Leyden, where he was chosen ruling elder of the church. For some years he instructed the students of the university in the English language and published several works in 1617. Embarked the 5th Aug., 1620 from Delfhaven and sailed for Southampton, after two attempts, the Speedwell being found unseaworthy the Elder embarked in the Mayflower the 6th Sept., and on the 11th Nov., after sixty-five days passage anchored in the harbor of Cape Cod. On the 11th Nov., the solemn compact was signed by the Pilgrim band. During the period of famine, he would thank God submissively that they were enabled "to suck of the abundance of the seas and treasures hid in land." He settled in Duxbury, 1632, and was the ruling elder of thee hurch there and his son, Johathan settled near him in 1635. Fear Brewster m. Isaac Allerton[1], and for several years the only aid to the governor. Wrestling Brewster d. before his father, unmarried, 1636, Fear Allerton d. left Isaac Allerton, Jr., 1634, May, 15th. Love Brewster m. Miss Sarah Collins, lately from England, dau. of William, 1624, Patience m. Thomas Prince, d. 1634, and left three children. Jonathan came over in the Fortune, 11th Nov., 1621, became a well-informed business man of the colony, a deputy of Duxbury to the Colonial court. Rem. to Connecticut, New London, 1648, keeper of records; deputy to Colonial court and associate judge. Lived on Brewster's Neck, and d. 1661.

FULLER

Fuller Samuel[1], Plymouth 1620, one of the most valued Pilgrims of the Mayflower, the first physician that came to settle in the country. Was a deacon at least eight years at Leyden, though his wife Bridget, who came in the Ann 1623 with a ch. which I think did not live long, may have been m. but a short time before he left Holland. Had Samuel and Mary b. here, both after 22 May, 1627, and both living 1650. He d. 1633 between 30 July and end of Oct. His wid, Bridget lived until 1664.

Samuel Fuller[2] was a preacher; preached at Middleborough 16 years and at last was ordained there 26 Dec., 1694, and d. 17 Aug. in his 71st year. Had wife, Elizabeth, but was not m. before 1650. Children mentioned in will, proved 1 Oct., 1695, were Mary, wife of Daniel Cole, perhaps his second; Samuel[3], b. 1659; Experience[3], w. of James Wood; John[3], Elizabeth[3], w. of Samuel Eaton; Hannah, w. of Eleazer Lewis, and Isaac[3], who was under age, as may have been the last daughter. The name of his wife is given in the Church Hist. of Mass. as Brewster, perhaps a granddaughter of the noble William; she d. at Plymouth 4 Nov., 1713.

Hist. of Cape Cod, Annals of Falmouth, p. 485, says Dr. Samuel Fuller of Plymouth, deacon, a skilful physician and distinguished for piety, m. 1st, in London, Eng., Elsie Glascock, m. 2d, Agnes Carpenter, m. 3d. Bridget Lee, May 27, 1617. He d. 1633, leaving a widow, Bridget, and son Samuel who was the first minister at Middleboro, ordained 1694, when he was ab. 65 years old. He was also selectman of Middleboro 1680.—Pierce's Colonial Hist., p. 47.

Dr. Samuel Fuller was governor's assistant Plymouth, 1632. City records of Leyden show William White m. 1 Feb., 1612, Anna Fuller. Samuel Fuller of London (whose former wife was Elsie Glascock) m. Agnes Carpenter of Wrentham, Eng. William Hoyt was his brother-in-law, and Alice Carpenter, the bride's sister, both witnesses. Samuel Fuller (former w. Agnes Carpenter) m. 27 May, 1617, Bridget Lee, whose mother, Toos Lee, was a witness.

Fuller[1] Edward, brother of the famous Samuel, came with him in the Mayflower 1620, bringing his wife Ann and son Samuel[2], and leaving Mathew on the other side, who was the elder; d. early next year, as did his wife, but his son Samuel[2] outlived the hardships. Mathew[2], Edward[1], Plymouth 1640; rem. to Barnstable 1652. Appt. surg. of the forces of the colonies 1673, a capt. 1675, and d. 1678. By Frances had Mary[3], m. 17 Apr., 1650, Ralph Jones; Elizabeth[3], m. 1652 Moses Rowley; Samuel[3] and John[3], and by Hannah had Ann[3], who m. her cousin Samuel[3], Samuel[2], Edward[1]. Dr. John[3], Mathew[2], Edward[1] of Barnstable, a physician, by 1st w. had Lydia[4], b. 1675, and by 2d w. Hannah of Boston, had Bethia[4], b. 6 Dec., 1687; John[4], b. Oct., 1689, and Reliance[4], b. 8 Sept., 1691. In this year (1691) he died and his widow m. 9 Dec., 1695, Captain John Lothrop, it is thought.

Samuel[3], Mathew[2] Edward[1] had by wife Mary, Thomas[4], Jabez[4], Timothy[4], Mathew[4], Elijah[4], Anne[4], and Samuel[4]

Thomas[4], b. 1650, son of Samuel[3], m. Eliza Lothrop, the dau. of Rev. John Lothrop, 29 Dec., 1680, who when a widow went to reside in Connecticut and took with her the records so long supposed to be lost, now in the Library of Yale College, and had Hannah[5], b. Nov. 17, 1681; Joseph[5], 12 July, 1683; Mary[5], 1685; Benjamin[5], 6 Aug., 1690; Eliza[5], 1692; Samuel[5], 12 Apr., 1694; and Abagail[5], 1696.—Hist. of Cape Cod, vol. II, pp. 485-6.

Samuel[2], Edward[1] came in the Mayflower 1620; made free man 1634; rem. to Scituate, thence to Barnstable. At Scituate, having m. 8 Apr., 1635, Jane, dau. of Rev. John Lothrop, had Hannah[3], m. 1 Jan., 1659, Nicholas Benham; Samuel[3], bap. ab. Sept. 11, 1638, may be the one who d. at Rehoboth 15 Aug., 1676; Sarah[3], bap. 1 Aug., 1651, at Barnstable; d. young; Mary[3], b. at Barnstable 16 June, 1644; m. 18 Nov., 1674, Joseph Williams; Thomas[3], b. 17 May, 1651; Sarah[3] again, 14 Dec., 1654; m. Crowell; and John[3], b. 1655, besides one who d. 8 Feb., 1658, 14 days old, perhaps others. He d. 31 Oct., 1683.

Samuel[3], Samuel[2], Edward[1] bap. 11 Feb., 1638; m. Ann, dau. of his uncle Mathew Fuller; had Mathew[4], Barnabas[4], Joseph[4], Benjamin[4], Desire[4], and Sarah[4]. He may be the same of Rehoboth who m. 17 Apr., 1673, Mary Ide, perhaps dau. of Nicholas.

John[3], b. 1655, son of Samuel[2], Edward[1], had by wife Mehitable, Samuel[4], Thomas[4], Shubael[4], and Thankful[4], all in Barnstable, and then removed to E. Hadden, Ct., where he had John[4], 10 Nov., 1697, and others. John[4], b. 1689, son of Dr. John[3], m. Thankful Gorham 16 June, 1710, and had Hannah[5], 1711, John[5] 3 Apr., 1712, who m. Temp. Gorham 1740; Mary[5] and Bethia[5] (twins) 1715; Nathaniel, b. 10 Dec., 1716; and Thankful[5], 1718.

Mathew[4] of Barnstable, probably son of Samuel[3], m. Patience Young, 25 Feb., 1692, and had Anne[5], 1693; Jonathan[5], 1696; Content[5], 1699; Jane[5], 1704; David[5], 1707; Young[5], 1708, and Cornelius[5], 1710.

Barnabas[4] (Samuel[3], Samuel[2], Edward[1]) m. Eliza Young 25th Feb., 1680, and had Samuel[5], 1681; Isaac[5], 1684; Hannah[5], 1688; Eben[5], 1699; Josiah[5], 1709. It is said that he by a second wife had Barnabas[5], 1721; Ebenezer[5], 1722; Joshua[5], 1727, and Lot[5], 1733. P. 485: Mr. Eleazer Fuller d. 13 July, 1860, age 94 years, in Falmouth, Mass. P. 154: Lt. or Capt. Joseph Fuller[3] d. Aug. 16, 1848, age 88; was a good citizen and patriot; b. 1758, son of Nathaniel[2], b. 10 Dec., 1716, whose father, John[4], b. 1689, was son of Dr. John[3] of Barnstable.

Scituate and Barnstable church records show dates of admission as follows: 1688, Mehitable, ye wife of Little John Fuller, 9 mo. 30 day, and Elizabeth, ye wife of Thomas Fuller, admitted. Oct. 21, Samuel, Thomas, Shubael of Mehitable Fuller. May 19, Thankful of Mehitable Fuller, and July 8, Samuel of Thomas and Elizabeth Fuller, Mary and Joseph of Elizabeth Fuller. 1696, Apr. 19, John and Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Fuller. 1686, Apr. 10, Behia of Jonathan and Hannah Fuller. 1691, 8 mo., 8th, Reliance of Hannah Fuller, she, Hannah, being a member of Boston. 1686, Thomas of Samuel and Mercy Prince. 1688, Feb. 10, Mary of Samuel and Mercy Prince. 1690, Aug. 3, Enoch of Samuel and Mercy Prince. 1693, Mar. 5, John of Samuel and Mercy Prince.

Rev. John Lothrop, Scituate, the first minister, was bred at Oxford, if the tradition may be trusted, but probably he was then there only for a short time, preached, perhaps at Edgerton in Kent but certainly in London, where Bishop Laud caused him to be imprisoned for it, for two years. On liberation from prison he embarked for Boston 1634. Had as fellow passengers, Rev. Zachary Symmes, celebrated Ann Hutchinson and many others; arrived in Sept. and 27th of that month went to Scituate, there m. second wife, Ann, who long outlived him, and d. 25th Feb., 1688. He removed to Barnstable with a large portion of his flock 11 Oct., 1639, and was held in honor to his death Nov. 8, 1653. His will, made Aug 10 before, provides for wife, eldest son, Thomas, and Benjamin, besides John, who was in England, and daughters Jane and Barbara. Jane m. 8 Apr., 1635, says her father, Samuel Fuller. Rev. John Lothrop's son Joseph of Barnstable, who came from England with his father, had 14 children, one of them, Eliza, b. 18 Sept., 1659, m. Dec. 29, 1680, Thomas Fuller.

Capt. Thomas Vose of the Army of the Revolution.

He was the son of Jonathan and Mary Vose of Milton, Mass., was born May 8, 1753, and died at Thomaston Me., Dec. 28, 1810. He was commissioned second lieutenant in Thomas Pierce's company of Gridley's artillery regiment May 8, 1775, transferred Jan. 1, 1776, to Gen. Henry Knox's artillery regiment; commissioned first lieutenant Crane's artillery regiment Jan. 1, 1777, captain (same regiment) Dec. 2, 1778; was one of the officers who guarded Major Andre prior to that officer's execution and was in many of the prominent battles of the war continuing in the service six months after the disbanding of the army. He then entered into mercantile business in Watertown, Mass., with his companions in arms, Major Daniel Jackson and Captain John George, but removed in 1787 at the request of his friend, Gen. Knox, to Thomaston, where he was associated in business with the general until 1804. He superintended the building of the Knox mansion, attended at the bedside of his dying friend and was one of the appraisers of his estate. Captain Vose was three years surveyor of the port of Thomaston and superintended in 1809 the erection of the fort on Georges river. He was a man of fine physical development and remarkable strength, a man of marked ability, a good business man and good judgment. He was one of the original members of the Massachusetts Society of Cincinnati. His remains now are buried in the cemetery at Thomaston. His grandson, Thomas Vose of Thomaston, succeeded him as member of the Massachusetts Society of the Cincinnati, in 1876.

Captain Vose for many years carried on business in the store on the wharf now occupied by Burgess, O'Brien & Co.

Will Add to its Value.

It is proposed to render the yearly issues of the Knox County Historical and Genealogical Magazine of additional value to all who enter into an arrangement to place their portraits and pictures therein. These portraits will go in as inserts, and these inserts will be given to each subscriber who enters into the arrangement and furnishes his picture or the picture of his family. Besides the evident advantage of making the volume, thus bound, an attractive family album of your own immediate family, you will obtain the "insert copies," of all the other portraits or pictures. For instance if one hundred pages of such inserted portraits were obtained, you would for the price of one insertion obtain ninety-nine other pages. The insert pages will be half-tone engravings made in the best manner and printed on extra fine board, will be as accurate as a photograph, as lasting as ink and as delightful as a friendly countenance. The extra cost, that is, the cost above the price of the magazine will be $10 for each insert page. The number of portraits which can be placed on a page will be from one to sixteen, according to the size of each portrait. The arrangement on each page will be as various as the individual tastes of each person may vary. Pictures of homes, rooms in the family mansions, places of business, streets, lawns and groups may be used on the same page with the portraits of individuals. The value of such illustrations in connection with the historical and family record can hardly be over-estimated. The only things necessary to determine the character of each page of the inserts, are the photographs of the persons and places which are to appear. These photographs better be of the same size, but any size can be utilized by rephotographing as necessary. A candid reflection will convince those interested that the attainment of such a result will be most delightsome and worth vastly more than its cost.

Bowdoin or Bowden.

The first of the name from whom the family trace their descent was Michael Bowdoin[1], of Lynn, 1690; m. Sarah, dau. of John and Sarah (Kertland) Davis (see Davis and Kertland pd.). In 1727 he was one of the original proprietors of Gilmantown, N. H. There were others of the same name in New England at earlier dates, from whom it is possible Michael may have descended or been related to. William Bowden was of the Dover combination, 20th Oct., 1640, and of Maine, [illegible] Ambrose Bowden of Scarborough, 1658, killed by the Indians, probably 1675. He had sons Ambrose, Jr., and probably John, who m. 1656, Grace Buly of Saco and had Hannah, Lucy, John and Nicholas. John was juryman Saco, 1661 and selectman, 1684. Thomas of Marblehead, 1668, John of Boston, 1668, a mason. Richard of Boston by w. Martha had Elizabeth, b. 18th May, 1681. Among the list of emigrants from Plymouth, Eng., 1633 and passenger in the ship Robert Bonaventura for St. Christopher is the name of Michael Bowden of Holston, age 24. Edward Bowden was deputy secretary of Barbadoes 5th Oct., 1665.

Francis Bowdoin[2], of Exeter, N. H., mariner and coaster, and son of Michael Bowden of Lynn, m. 1734, Elizabeth, dau. of Thomas and Deborah Webster and had Deborah, b. 7th Dec., 1735; Rebecca, b. 28th Sept., 1740. The Strafford County Recorded Deeds, vol. 1, p. 400, shows that Deborah and Rebecca Bowden of Exeter deed to their uncle, John Bowden of Exeter, joiner one-eighth part of one proprietor's share in township of Gilmantown, N. H., laid out to one grandfather, Michael Bowden, 2d March, 1762; and that Michael Bowden of Exeter deeds to his uncle, John Bowden, joiner, one-eighth share in Gilmantown, laid out to Michael Bowden, original proprietor.

In Rockingham county Probate Records, 1765, John Bowden of Exeter, Samuel Kelley of Brentwood and Elizabeth his wife, and Sarah Bowden, sell three acres of salt marsh of Hampton Falls, laid out and allotted to Elizabeth, wife of John Bowden, late deceased, and daughter of Jonathan Folsom, late of Exeter.

A deed of 1769, vol. 99 mentions Susanna, daughter of John and Elizabeth Bowden, and grand-daughter of Jonathan Folsom. A deed, 1768, vol. 79, mentions Michael Bowden, son of late Sarah Bowdoin of Exeter, deceased; she was the daughter of Jonathan Thing of Exeter, and her husband was probably a brother to John Bowden, joiner of Exeter. From all that we can deduce from the foregoing it appears that John Bowden[2], m. 1st Elizabeth Folsom and had four children; John Bowden[3], Elizabeth[3], m. Samuel Kelley; Sarah Bowden[3], and Susanna Bowden[3], by 2d wife Huldah, had three children, 1, Michael[4], b. 11th Feb., 1760; 2, a child; 3, Daniel, who died soon after his father John, who d. 1765. Susanna Bowden[3], m. Joseph Nealley.

Col. Joseph Cilley remembers seeing his uncle, Michael Bowden when he visited Nottingham. He resided in Maine, probably in Waterboro, York county.

Longfellow.

William Longfellow[4], father of the emigrant William[3], lived at Hosforth, near Leeds in Yorkshire, Eng., as appears from a letter from Samuel Sewell to Stephen Sewell, dated Boston in N. E., 1680.

William Longfellow[3], b. in Yorkshire, Eng., 1651, d. Oct., 1690; m. 10th

Nov., 1678, Anna, dau. of Henry and Jane (Dummer) Sewell (see Sewell pedigree and Dummer). He came to Newbury, Mass., in his youth, and took the oath of allegiance in 1678. He was a man of talents and education, and wrote an elegant hand, but was not so much of a Puritan as some others. In the Woodman Genealogy he is called "very Improvident and loved a frolic rather too well. He was what would be called at the present day a high buck." He went to England in 1687 to obtain patrimony in Yorkshire. He returned to N. E. and enlisted as ensign under Phipps in the ill-fated expedition against Quebec, and was drowned with nine others on his return at Anticosta Island. His widow m. 11th May, 1692, Henry Short and had seven children. By 1st husband six children, Nathan Longfellow[3], b. 5h Feb., 1690; d. 15th Jan., 1731; m. 28th May, 1713, Mary, dau. of Jacob Green (see Green ped.) He lived in Hampton Falls. Had seven children, the first was Jonathan Longfellow[4], b. 23 May, 1714; m. 28th Oct., 1731, Merey, dau. of Henry and Elizabeth (Greenleaf) Clark. (See Greenleaf and Clark ped). He moved from Hampton to Nottingham, N. H., and lived in that part of the town which was subsequently set off to Deerfield. In a deed dated 1761, he was then of Rye, N. H. He deeds his daughter Sarah Cilley a piece of land in the crook of the Pemichewasset and Winnepisokee. Subsequently he moved to Nova Scotia and from there to Machias, Me., where he resided until his death. In a deed in the register of deeds office, Exeter, N. H., mentions Merey Longfellow as a widow and spinster of New Market, N. H., 1783. Issue 12 children, the 11th was Sarah Longfellow[5], b. 17th Nov., 1739; d. 23d May, 1811; m. Feb. 4th, 1756, Gen. Joseph Cilley.

Personal Editorial.

The amount of work involved in obtaining and placing in appropriate sequence the diversified facts of biography and genealogical dates must be apparent to every reader.

Your attention is invited to matter of family histories of Knox county, and to the perusal of the plans relating thereto. Whether or not you should subscribe for the Knox County Historical and Genealogical Magazine is not now presented to your contemplation; that decision is one that the editor of this magazine is barred from arguing because such subscription must be determined by you from your own standpoint. It is only appropriate to present this fact as an element of your decision, viz: full sets of the magazine will be worth more than they cost within two years. If any person is not fully satisfied after taking them for a year or two years, the back issues will be received in full payment of such years, remembering of course that complete sets alone are of value, that broken sets are only valuable as they are needed to complete sets for binding. The only decision that is now presented for your determination is—will you or will you not, aid the editor in presenting the genealogical facts and biographical information necessary to complete the record of your family or family name?

The value of such complete record is open and apparent. Only one of the minor reasons will be given, which has just come fresh from a gentleman friend: "I was visiting a cousin whom I had formerly known most intimately and had heard the names of her children many times, but their names and succession of ages had never framed themselves in my memory. I was expected to know them all, for they all knew me well, but for two or three days I was uncomfortable and perplexed by want of memory as to names and ages, and the awkwardness of injuiry, when such injuiry manifested want of interest in and knowledge of kinship. I would have given a large sum of money to have had a book for reference wherein I could have found the names of my cousin's family and placed them in their order before my mind, and thus greeted them and inquired about them intelligently."

In addition to the mathematical ease of tracing families up and down the family line, easy as following a numerical sequence, a complete index of each and every name mentioned, will accompany each yearly volume. The large number of family reunions held yearly, with such success in this county, demanded some permanent record of those families and their ancestry, otherwise the fragrance of such gatherings is yearly dissipated and lost. The vast number of patriotic societies in Maine and over the whole of the United States, Sons of the Revolution, also daughters of that war, various Colonial socities and organizations of the Colonial wars descendants and the various societies of those claiming parentage from the Pilgrim Fathers, all claim some recognition from your hands; even if you are not interested personally to know your own line of connection with any of them, it may be that your children have a claim on you that you obtain, while possible, information and facts which they may prize and use for their own and their children's advantage and pleasure, or may it be your own duty to the name you bear that others may know whence you come and who you are. These suggestions are each and severally urged on your attention to this extent, at least, that you at once communicate all the data of genealogical interest pertinent to yourself and your own immediate family, facts which are in your own memory and at your finger ends. Give this little information if nothing more. Some member of your household may be induced to go further and to such ones all possible aid and advice will be freely given by the editor. This proposition is urged as fair and reasonable, at least, to the extent of replying yes or no, to the question proposed above. A negative reply, even, is of value as the editor will then know, he must apply elsewhere for the necessary information. It will be evident that the value of each reply depends largely on their promptness and fullness, and that the presentation of families will hereafter be given in their alphabetical order as far as possible.

If any doubt remains in your mind in regard to the above requests, I wish you would respond to the above editorial.

The matter of pictures is an after consideration, if you wish any information in regard to their presentation in addition to that given in page 76 of February issue 1896, it will be very gladly given you by the editor, and samples of pages of such portraits shown you. A careful examination of the magazines as far as printed is earnestly desired to enable you to fully comprehend the fullness and accuracy of genealogical and biographical information therein contained. On both these points, as well as its arrangement and its tables of ancestry, it has received high enconiums from the best authorities in the land. Its further success can only be secured by the hearty cooperation of all the families in Knox county and this cooperation is now entreated from your hands, at least to the extent of replying , yes or no, to the question of supplying the records of yourself and your own immediate family.

The Gamble Family.

511. Lucy Colfax Prince (141) (Isabella Coombs[4], Elizabeth Gamble[3], Archibald[2], Thomas[1]), b. 25th Aug., 1810; d. 17th Jan., 1853; m. 5th July, 1836, Edward St. John Nealley, b. in Lee, N. H., Dec. 16, 1811. Bowdoin College 1835. He did not complete his course, but was subsequently admitted to a degree with his class. He read law with his relative, Hon. Jonathan Cilley, and practised for a short time, but being appointed by President Van Buren, deputy collector of customs at Bath, he relinquished the profession, and continued through successive administrations in the office (being promoted to collector) until his death, 21 Aug., 1881, being the oldest collector of customs in years of service in the country, ever respected for integrity and ability. He was repeatedly a member of the city government of Bath, and held other positions of responsibility. He subsequently, Dec. 31, 1859, married Sarah A. Pope (481).

The Nealleys came from the north of Ireland, probably Bellecarry in the county of Derry, as Mathew was b. there. They settled in Nottingham, N. H., about 1725. The first whose name appears was Andrew Nele[1]. On the 3d Sept., 1730, he signs as one of the dissenters to the power given to a committee to treat with Mr. Mayhew about his continuance in the ministry.

In the inventory of his estate, which was valued £256 14s. Sept. 28, 1733, his wife Martha and son William are mentioned. William Nealley[2] came with his parents probably. He owned and lived on the "Ledge farm" and built the first house upon it. He died quite suddenly while sitting in his chair. Had four children, of whom Mathew Nealley[3], b. in Bellecarry, Derry county, Ireland, who died Sept., 1757; m. at Portsmouth, N. H., 27th Nov., 1739, Margaret, dau. of Joseph and Mary Beverland, b. in Coleraine, Derry county, Ireland; she m. after her husband's death, Samuel Huntoon, yeoman of Nottingham. Mathew was a large landholder. He built the house at the head of Long hill just north of the square. His estate was appraised 28th Dec., 1759, at £24,641 12s.; had six children, of whom Joseph Nealley[4] m. Susanna, dau. of John and Elizabeth (Folsom) Bowdoin of Exeter; m. 2d, Molly, dau. of John Nealley[3]; he was a farmer in Nottingham and resided in the house his father built, north of and just off the square. He was a very religious man, had six children, of whom Edward Bowdoin Nealley[5], b. Dec., 1784; d. 27th June, 1837; m. Sally True and resided at Lee, N. H., and had Edward St. John Nealley[6].

CHILDREN.

512. Hon. Edward Bowdoin Nealley[6], b. 22d July, 1837; m. 11th June, 1867, Mary Ann, dau. of Jacob and Mary Ann Drummond of Bangor, d. 15th Jan., 1877. Graduated at Bowdoin College, 1858. During the war he was for a while chief clerk of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, Navy Department, and in 1864 was appointed United States district attorney of the territory of Montana, which had just been organized. Went into business at Bangor, Me. Elected a member of the legislature and speaker of the House and subsequently state senator and mayor of Bangor; now president of the Merchants Insurance company, and have one child, Mary Drummond Nealley[7], b. 13th Sept., 1872. Rice; she d. in Boston, 13th Feb., 1891, aged 67. Was in trade in Thomaston early in his life but the air of sea adventure, which permeated Thomaston at that date, caused him to run away and try the dangers of whale fishing in the Pacific ocean for some years. Subsequently after a sojourn among the Araucanian Indians in South America he returned to the United States and after some business ventures west settled in Bath and was president of a marine insurance company. In the fall of 1861, he enlisted part of a company of men and was commissioned as captain of Co. K, 1st Maine Cavalry, and served till Dec. 12th, 1862, when he resigned. In 1879 he removed to Boston and has resided there since. He has written several stories and contributed articles to the New England Magazine.* To his efforts largely the errors in "Old Times in Yarmouth, Me." published Oct., 1880, which makes Elder John Prince[2], of Hull, to have three wives and twelve children by his second wife, Margaret, have been corrected; also the errors in "Winsor's History of Duxbury," where Elder Prince's history is confused with the families of his contemporaries, and showed that Elder John Prince[2], who married Alice Honor, had seven sons and two daughters and the youngest son was Thomas Prince[3].

538. Hezekiah Prince Coombs[5] (150) (George[4], Elizabeth Gamble[3], Archibald[2], Thomas[1]) b. 1st Sept., 1813; d. 26th Apr., 1853; m. 8th Aug., 1842, Lucinda, dau. of Charles and Lucy (Reed) Spofford of Rockland, Me. When only 10 years old his father died, leaving a farm, mills, and kiln property to be looked after. About 11 years of age it fell his lot to take charge of the old grist mill, which, like all tide mills, could only be run at low water about half the time, and at high water his services were required in the field or lime kiln. 1825: In the fall went to Castine to live with his grandfather. 1826: Returned home, where he lived two years working on the farm and burning lime. 1827: Commenced going to sea in the Matilda. 1828: Went to learn a trade with Mr. Edwin Moody, who then published the "Thomaston Register," the first newspaper printed in Thomaston. Here he remained as an apprentice some four years. 1832: Went to Bath and worked upon the "Maine Inquirer." 1833: Was back to the old establishment in Thomaston with George W. Nichols. In the spring worked for John B. Sears, East Thomaston. In the fall went to Boston on the "Daily Advertiser." 1834: Shipped in a whaling voyage to the South Antartic Ocean from Sag Harbor, Long Island, touching during the voyage at the following places, viz: Fayall, Madagascar, Cape Town, and St. Helena. Here he visited (Mar., 1836) the grave of Napoleon Bonaparte, an account of which was given in the "Thomaston Recorder" of 1839. 1836: Arrived back at Sag Harbor after an absence of 22 months, going from here to Ned York city to work at his trade. 1837: Returned to Thomaston and in August issued the first number of the "Thomaston Recorder." The paper was neutral in politics. It flourished, and the subscribers so increased that at the end of the year it was enlarged in size nearly one-half. Doubtless no publisher ever applied himself more closely to business during the years conducting this paper than he. Much of the time having no help in the office except a younger sister or a boy, and it was in this printing office he lost the greatest blessing this world affords, "health," in consequence of which the paper was brought to a close Oct., 1846, after an existence of nine years. 1847: Was elected to the office of register of deeds for the Eastern district of Lincoln county, which office he held at his death.

Captain Hayden was one of the best known and most estimable citizens of South Thomaston. Most of his life was spent upon the sea, which he began to follow at 18 years of age, and on which he spent the greater part of his time for 33 years. He was a skillful master mariner and commanded some of the best vessels sailing out of American ports, among them the following: Barks Emma C. Litchfield, Emma Bell, Fanny C. Kennedy and Levi C. Andrews and the brig Caroline Gray. Captain Hayden's last voyage was made in the bark Levi C. Andrews. His principal trips were between New York, South America and Australia. Some years since he retired from the sea, and for the past two seasons he had been the genial and popular landlord of Sunnyside cottage at Owl's Head. This year he was to have opened the Simpson house, and was on his way to Rockland to meet Mr. Simpson and complete arrangements when the accident causing his death occurred. He was driving through the village of South Thomaston and nearly opposite the residence of A. O. Glover when the carriage struck a hard elevation in the road and he was thrown out and killed.

563. Captain George Coombs Dow[5], (158) (Elizabeth Coombs[4], Elizabeth Gamble[3], Archibald[2], Thomas[1]), b. 27th Dec., 1808; m. 1st, 12th Dec., 1833, Catherine P., dau. of Roland and Mary (Holland) Wade, b. 1st Jan., 1810; d. 23d June, 1859; m. 2d, 26th July, 1862, Mrs. Sarah J. (Piper) Fales, dau. of David and Eliza (Gleason) Fales, b. 3d Dec., 1823. He commenced sea life 26th Jan., 1828, in schooner General Jackson, in which vessel he owned a part as one of the builders. In Feb., 1828, shipped on the ship Publius, went to Havana, Cuba, and shipped in the bark Bremen of Boston and went to Amsterdam, Holland, there shipped in the Dutch ship Flora (103 years old) as carpenter and went to Archangel, Russia, and returned to Amsterdam, Nov. 4th; shipped on the 20th for six years on board of a Dutch man-of-war bound for Batavia, sailed Jan. 6, 1829, put into S. Jago, Cape de Verde Islands. There he and two others swam ashore and concealed themselves in the woods for three days, without food or drink. His companion unable to endure thirst any longer went to a spring on the island and was arrested and taken aboard the ship and sailed on Jan. 27th. On Mar. 3d shipped on board the sealing schooner Bellville, Captain Bray of Newburyport, Mass., and sailed for the Falkland Islands, Staten Land and Terra del Fuego, then under the governorship of Luis Vernet of Buenos Aires, whose headquarters were at Port Luis, East Falklands, cruising part of the time in the schooner, and part in a shallop and whale boats. The schooner was eventually lost in the Straits of Magellan. On the 27th Dec., 1831, his shallop was taken in tow by the U. S. sloop of war Lexington, Captain Duncan, fifteen men in charge of a lieutenant, were put on board of her and they went to Port Luis, which they brutally captured on the 30th, taking prisoners Mr. Brisbane and the other colonists of Governor Luis Vernet, dispersing and removing the entire colony from the island. Why! Because Governor Vernet under the authority of Buenos Aires goverment, was endeavoring to protect the same kind of valuable seals from indiscriminate capture and destruction as the United States is now expending over a million dollars to protect on the islands of Pribilof. In Feb., 1832 he was left on Staten Islands with a boat's crew of four men to seal, here they remained for fifteen months, and on the 6th of May, 1833, left in an English cutter for the Falkland Islands. On Aug. 1st, 1833 he took passage for the United States in the schooner "Sun" of New London, Conn., Captain Prot, and arrived in the U. S. the latter part of Nov. The seal skins, he brought with him realized $1300, the net results of his nearly five years sealing. Five weeks after his return he married, and went into trade with his brother, James, in South Thomaston. After two or three years, he gave up trading, and built the schooner "George and James," and was engaged in the coasting trade in her for five years, when he took the new schooner "I. O. of O. F.," and was in her employ by the U. S. government at Brazos de Santiago, Texas, when Gen. Taylor gained his victories at Palo Alto, and Reseca de la Palma. He returned home in the spring of 1847, and built the steamer "Gold Hunter," to run on the Warren river and Georges canal, when the Canal company failed, he went east to Machias with the steamer and was there employed in towing vessels. Sold his steamer in the fall of 1849, and took passage in the bark Perfect for California, and after one hundred and forty-five days passage arrived in San Francisco. Went to the mines and remained there five months, until he was taken sick and obliged to leave for home. He came back via the Isthmus of Panama, bringing with him over $3000 in gold, the results of his five months work in the mines, arrived home in about one year from the time he left. Since then he has been coasting, trading, and fishing nearly every year and kept a hotel in South Thomaston about four years. In 1877 he removed to Thomaston, where he built himself a home. In Sept., 1882, while in command of the schooner Pulaski of Thomaston, loaded with lime, off Rye Beach, N. H., his sails were blown away and he was obliged to anchor on a lee shore. He left the schooner at dusk, and the next day she got afire, and sunk at 10 a. m. Res. now of Thomaston with his daughter, Catherine.

Knox County in Early Maine History.

BY GEORGE PRINCE.

Knox county, although it is one of the latest and smallest counties organized in the state, yet within its boundary lines is a region glittering with the gems of ancient historic lore. Quaint and curious are its legends containing romantic incidents replete with the most interesting and fascinating history. Our rivers and our mountain regions were the first ever explored in America, north of Cape Hatteras by Englishmen. Champlain, the French navigator in 1604 explored the Penobscot river up to the falls. To him belongs the honor of being the first European explorer of any river in New England. In June, 1605, he continued his discoveries westward from the bay of Fundy, and was the first European to explore the Sheepscot and Kennebec rivers on the 5th and 6th of July, but the English navigator, George Waymouth, was a little ahead of him on our coast of Knox county, having reached our waters May 17, 1605, o. s., discovering our beautiful and commodious river, St. George, up which he explored some 20 miles, bearing aloft the colors and cross of St. George, and marched a body of armed men some three or four miles through the forest, primeval towards our Knox county mountains.

He set sail from our coast on his return voyage June 26, (new style). Champlain crossed his track near Monhegan only five days after, and anchored at the mouth of the river Kennebec, July 1, and on the 5th, piloted by the natives, he sailed up the Sheepscot to Wiscasset, and from thence through the back rivers into the Kennebec river, opposite the present city of Bath, which there for the first time in recorded history bore an European flag above its waters, the pennons and lillies of France. These gallant Frenchmen continued their voyage as far south as Plymouth harbor. On their return east they anchored again at the mouth of the Kennebec, July 29, where they for the first time were informed by the natives that a ship ten leagues from there, engaged in fishing, had killed five natives. This story referred to the five natives carried by Waymouth to England, two of whom were given to Sir F. Gorges, and returned in two years to their native wilds at Pemaquid. It is also said that the others were eventually returned to their homes at Pemaquid.

Rosier's Narrative.

The two original narrations of Waymouth's voyage have been re-printed several times in American periodicals. The were both copied by James Rosier from his journal of the voyage, he having been employed for that purpose by Baron Arundell, the patron of the expedition. His first hasty narrative was printed in London in the fall of 1605, leaving out everything that would point out the locality to any foreign nation. In the second copy printed in the 4th volume of

"Purchase's Pilgrims," 1625, the author gave the particulars held back by the first edition, and points out the true locality very plainly. This edition was reprinted a few years ago in the "Boston Transcript," and Rockland Courier and Gazette, which latter paper included two old maps of 1610, one giving "Waymouth's river," the other a river and a cross, where St. Georges river now is.

The name St. George had not affixed itself to our river as early as 1610. It was first called Pemaquid and Waymouth's river. But as early as 1614, Captain John Smith calls it St. Georges' river. The Plymouth pilgrims in 1621 knew it by this name when they visited Popham's fishing fleet at St. Georges' islands in order to replenish their exhausted stores. They also then saw the vast forest of noble trees on the banks of the river, and erected a fort and wharf at the bend or "cod" of the river, where stood Waymouth's cross, erected 29 years before, and where the Knox mansion was built in 1793.

Thus we see that the St. Georges' river was the first river in New England to receive an English name, and was the first port of entry and clearance where the Pilgrim fathers loaded their ships with timber for the London market.

It is to be hoped that many copies of Rosier's second edition of Waymouth's voyage printed a few years ago for the first time in America by the "Courier-Gazette," have been preserved by some of our historical students. For from that original narration and unimpeachable record we learn that on the soil of Knox county were erected the two first English crosses on the shores of New England. Here were the first Christian prayers uttered, the first Christian sermon preached, in the English tongue, the first garden planted. Gosnold started a garden at Elizabeth island in 1602. He and Martin Pring in 1603, add another star to the Knox county galaxy of early history, for they landed at Owl's Head, and adjacent isles, and hunted the foxes, otters, and martins there. The first vessel built, the first wells dug by English hands in America north of Cape Hatteras.

It was our good old Indian chief, whom the Somerset fishermen at St. Georges islands nick-named "Captain John Somerset" of Muscongus Island, who welcomed so heartily the Plymouth Pilgrims to the New England shores. Gov. Bradford, in writing 25 years afterwards, misspelled the name Sami-o-set, which error has been continued to the present time.

The Mythical City of Norembega-Bashaba Town.

The visit of David Ingram to this region in 1568 is not all a fable. He did find here, in what is now the city of Rockland, a large Indian town, over which the great Bashaba reigned. On John Smith's map of 1614, Prince Charles, afterward Charles II, gave it the name of "Norwich." Ingram in 1568 calls this Indian town Bega, adding "it is three-fourths of a mile long with houses having pillars of crystal and silver." It is only charitable to suppose that in the last part of this sentence he was intending to describe the city of the Montezumas, which he had just left and thus got his descriptions mixed. To this description of Ingram's we are doubtless indebted for the Mythical "City of Norembega," being sought for on our shores by the early navigators. Champlain was the first to prove that the "City of Norembega" had no existence. It is as visionary as Kid's hidden gold.

It is, however, interesting to know that this fabulous mythical city was here on the ground where we every day tread. Bashaba, the noted Indian monarch who held sway over all the tribes from Pemaquid to Mount Desert, resided here, in all the pomp and grandeur of a Montamora or Powhatan. He welcomed Senor de Champlain in 1604, urged him again in 1605 to land at Cape Bedabedec, Owl's Head and make him a visit. He also, only 10 or 12 days before had sent a message across the carry to St. Georges river urging Captain Waymouth to land and make him a visit, but Waymouth having five Indian captives on board, was over suspicious, and declined, "Conscience makes cowards of us all." The captives that Waymouth had on board were Pemaquid Indians, and Bashaba was at that time ignorant of their capture. Had Waymouth accepted this friendly invitation, or had he but extended his march inland a few furlongs further, to the top of Marsh's mountain, where a picture of Penobscot bay with its lovely islands and delightful perspective would have greeted his eye, and at his feet a city of Indian wigwams with its dusky and lively inmates would have wrapt him in wonder and astonishment. Then indeed no question would ever have been raised regarding the river he explored; and he too would have "laid the ghost" of that mythical "City of Norembega."

The country called "Norembega" is located in this region in all of the early maps, its boundary lines are variously marked by the makers of those maps, some of them quite correct, others quite the reverse..

Acadia.

Knox county marks the western limits of Acadia. Oliver Cromwell, in the year 1656 describes, in his communication to Sir Thomas Temple, recorded in the third volume of Suffolk County Register of Deeds, the western shore limits to end at "Pentecost, St.

Georges, and Muscongus," three-well known points at that time. Cromwell had no taste for using the French names of places, instead of English. He called the Penobscot river by that name instead of Pentagoet, the French name, and the large river in the Bay of Funda, "St. John." So too he here uses the two English names given by Waymouth, Pentacost and St. Georges also the Indian name Muscongus to show unmistakably the western shores of Acadia.

Here also in Knox county was the head-quarters of the great "Waldo grant," which extended to Brewer on the river Penobscot, where General Waldo suddenly fell dead while marking his territorial bounds, May 23, 1759.

Gen. Waldo and Sir William Pepperill, the hero of Louisburg, were distinguished British officers of the colonial times. They were both American born, and fast friends. Waldo took much interest in furthering the Louisburg expedition, commanded a regiment there and assisted Sir William in organizing his forces. A short mention of their domestic relations may not be uninteresting. Sir William's son, and Waldo's daughter were designed by their parents to cement more strongly the friendship of the two families. From some freak on the part of the young man the marriage ceremony was put off from time to time, much to the chagrin of the young lady, and the two families. At last the day was actually fixed, and the young couple stood before the altar when she suddenly turned to her companion saying: "Your vacillating conduct has been such that I have lost all confidence in you, and now decline to be your bride." It was a sad blow to the old veterans, but fell very lightly on the two most intrested. Young Pepperill went back to his boon companions and died at the age of 23. The young lady in a few months became the wife of the gallant Thomas Fluker the colonial secretary. It was their daughter, Lucy, who, inheriting something of her mother's independence, left her aristocratic Tory family and wedded the young rebel bookbinder, Henry Knox.

So that it seems that the romantic story has some connection with our Knox county, and its early families.

Had we space we might add many other incidents of much interest, what we have written will show that Knox county occupies a very early place in New England history.

"The map marked A gives the correct position of the river with the islands at its mouth, and what is more convincing names it "Waymouth river."

This last named map was published to the world by Purchase in his third volume in 1624, and there are many copies in the libraries of the U. S. Yet strange to say not one of the advocates of the Kennebec theory have ever mentioned it.

"The map marked B, is a portion of a map of the United States made as early as 1610 and has quite an eventful history. It was made in Virginia by order of the King of England and forwarded to Great Britain, where it soon very mysteriously disappeared and for nearly 300 years has been almost forgotten. It now transpires that Philip 3rd of Spain, who claimed all America, learned that the English were colonizing the Virginias, sent word to Don Alonzo de Valesco, his minister at London, to forward him all the information he could obtain in relation to these trespassers upon his domains. Valesco in some adroit manner got possession of this map which thus, March 22, 1611, came into possession of the Spanish court, and was recently discovered in the Archives of Salamancas, volume 2588, folio 22. It was copied by Alexander Brown of New York and for the first time in the world, probably, printed in his valuable work, "The Genesis of the United States," volume 1st, page 456; published by the Riverside Press, Cambridge, 1890, from which the above portions have been copied."

OLD POSTMASTERS AND POST OFFICES OF ROCKLAND.

By Rev. W. O. Holman.

Elkanah S. Smith, April 7, 1853. The office had always been under appointment from the postmaster general, from whom Mr. Smith received this, his first commission. In the meantime the office became a presidential appointment and Mr. Smith was reappointed Feb. 21, 1856. Elkanah S. Smith was the son of Richard and Betsey (Butler) Smith, and was born in what is now Rockland, Jan. 2, 1810.

His grandfather, Jonathan Smith, was born in Smithfield, R. I., Aug. 9, 1712. O. S., married Elizabeth McDougle, who was born at old St. George's fort, now Thomaston, where both resided and died. From this it will appear that this branch of the Smith family dates back to the very earliest settlement of this section of the Waldo Patent.

Elkanah S. Smith was a joiner by trade, and in the course of his life built many of the oldest houses in Rockland and vicinity. He practically rebuilt the old First Baptist church in South Thomaston about the year 1845.

He was a man of sterling character, intelligence and good judgment, a very excellent citizen and made a good postmaster. At the time of his first appointment the postoffice was in the John Spofford shoe shop, now John Lee's dining room and restaurant, but before he had been postmaster long he removed it to ampler and better quarters to what was then the express office in the rear end of the present T. H. Donahue drug store. The block of which this store is a part was built by the late lamented Major General Hiram G. Berry.

Mr. Smith subsequently removed with his family to North Billerica, Mass., where he died. He was twice married, first to Susan J. Perry, Feb. 27, 1834, and second to Melia R. (Butler) Fales, Sept. 21, 1837. William H. Smith, the well known accountant and tax collecteor is a son by the second wife. There were several sons and daughters.

The next postmaster was Benjamin W. Lothrop, appointed March 1, 1839. He was born in Searsmont, Jan. 10, 1822; married Francis A. Washburn, and came here from Belfast.

His brother, Capt. Sumner P. Lothrop, also came to Rockland, was afterward an acting master in the U. S. Navy, and died in Boston, June 15 1863.

Mr. Lothrop and wife had only one child, a daughter, Carrie B. Lothrop. Mr. Lothrop during his entire life in Rockland was in the dry goods business, first with Johnson, Hall & Co., and afterward by himself in the store now occupied by John Frohock as a millinery establishment.

Mr. Lothrop was a man of integrity, good business ability, and excellent traits of character. He afterward removed to Kansas where he died. He was east only once after his removel, paying a visit to his old home and friends in Rockland.

Mr. Lothrop was succeeded by Miles C. Andrews, June 17, 1861. M. Andrews was one of twin sons of George Andrews and Sophia (Cobb) Andrews. The other of the twins was Orris S. Andrews. They were born in Warren, July 29, 1819. Miles C. Andrews married Elizabeth Wakefield, a daughter of Rev. John Wakefield, then of Warren, but afterward and until his death, a resident of Rockland.

Miles C. and Orris Andrews came to Rockland and caried on a book and stationary business in the store now occupied by W. C. Pooler as a drug store. Miles C. Andrews transferred the postoffice to the store now occupied by Crockett & Lovejoy. He was postmaster a little over three years, when he was superceded by Oliver J. Conant.

Mr. Andrews was subsequently proprietor of the Thorndike house, where he died. He was a very bright interesting gentleman of a peculiarly genial disposition; a popular favorite with the citizens of Rockland, winning and retaining to the last a host of friends. His death was universally regretted.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrews had only one child, a daughter, Minnie, a beautiful and accomplished young lady who married and resides in Massachusetts. Mrs. Andrews was woman greatly beloved in Rockland, especially in the First Baptist church, of which she was a member, now makes her home with her daughter.

Mr. Conant was chief clerk with Mr. Andrews three years and was appointed to fill out his unexpired term, in 1869. He was re-appointed in 1870, and again in 1874. He also served eight years in the money order department under his successor. In all he was in the postoffice exactly 22 years. He is at present, and has been for a number of years Rockland's efficient city agent. He removed the postoffice to its present quarters on the last night in October, 1876.

Mr. Conant went out with the 4th Maine Regiment as captain of company C, but was compelled by ill health to resign in August, 1861. He entered the service again 24th April, 1864, as captain of Co. B, Maine Coast Guards, was stationed at Fort Foote, near Washington, D. C., and remained in service till 24th June, 1865.

Oliver J. Conant was succeeded by George W. Kimball, who served two full terms under Presidents Rutherford B. Hayes and Chester A. Arthur. His first commission dated Dec. 14, 1878, and he took charge of the office Jan. 1, 1878. His second commision was dated Dec. 16, 1881. Mr. Kimball's parents were George W. Kimball, Sr and Olive B. (Carleton) Kimball. He was born in Rockland in 1834 and was married to Elmira A. Achorn April 26, 1856. They have one son, S. Thayer Kimball, a graduate of Amherst college, a member of the Knox bar.

Mr. Kimball has been a lime manufacturer, having been in companywith George Gregory at the North end, has been interested in railroading and steamboating, served four years as deputy collector of the Waldoboro district in charge of the Rockland custom house, was mayor of the city in 1869, and re-elected in 1870, is a bright enterprising business man, is yet in the prime of life and has the esteem of his fellow citizens.

Mr. Kimball was succeeded by Captain William P. Hurley, who took charge of the office March 15, 1886, and served four years under President Cleveland during his first administration.

Captain Hurley was born in Portsmouth, N. H., in 1847. He was the son of John and Margaret Hurley of that city, came to Rockland in 1868, and was married the same year to Frances E. Pillsbury, a daughter of the late Samuel Pillsbury. From his early boyhood he followed the sea, rising step by step from before the mast to the command of several of the best deep sea vessels sailing out of American ports. For a number of years he sailed out of Boston in the employ of the late Samuel S. Cobb, one of Boston's wealthy ship owners and merchants, and at one time mayor of that great center of maritime and mercantile business. Captain Hurley continued to follow the sea long after coming to Rockland and up to 1882. His last voyage was made that year to the coast of Africa in Mr. Cobb's interest. Since leaving the postoffice Captain Hurley has been engaged in trade and in the manufacture of lime. He is a genial gentleman and popular among Rockland people.

John Lovejoy followed Mr. Hurley. Mr. Lovejoy is the son of Samuel I. and Mary (Chandler) Lovejoy, and was born in Rockland, Dec. 22, 1842. He was educated in the public schools of Rockland, became an accountant and was for many years closely associated with the lime business of the city and county as bookkeeper for Cobb, Wight & Case, and secretary of the Lime Burners' association until its dissolution. He married Ella A. Spear. He was mayor of Rockland in 1895, and was re-elected to the same honorable office last spring. It is needless to say that he made a good postmaster, as it is an open secret that he fills every position with which he is entrusted with painstaking fidelity and ability. The favor with which he is regarded by his fellow citizens is sufficiently apparent from the number of terms they have selected him as their standard bearer.

Rockland's present efficient postmaster is a younger man than any of his predecessors in office. Parker T. Fuller succeeded Mr. Lovejoy April 15, 1894.

He is not a native of Rockland, but was born on Deer Isle, June 24, 1858. His parents were Thomas S. and Eliza R. (Lufkin) Fuller of that place. After receiving a good education he came to Rockland in 1877 and entered the employ of Joseph E. Robinson, who kept a drug store in the old Dr. Cook place, Main street. He stayed with Mr. Robinson through 1878 and then left the city for a season. He returned, and on the 2d of February, 1882, entered the employ of Edward Merrill, druggist, on the stand afterwards occupied by F. F. Burpee, and now occupied by T. H. Donahue. He continued with Mr. Merrill, then with Merrill & Burpee, and then with F. F. Burpee until March, 1886, when he entered the post office as clerk under Captain William P. Hurley, served through Captain Hurley's term and also through Mr. Lovejoy's term and until he himself was appointed postmaster.

Parker T. Fuller is a capable, agreeable gentleman with a host of friends, has succeeded admirably in the management of his office, has secured several marked improvements and better facilities, not the least among which which may be mentioned the new system of boxes.

In conclusion it may be said that the Rockland postoffice has grown from a little adjunct to a country store to be one of the largest and most important offices in the state, and that it has had a succession of postmasters to whose records the city may point with just and honest pride.

WOOD, HUNT AND WATSON FAMILIES.

I am interested in the Wood and Hunt pedigrees. My mother's name was Emily Wood, daughter of Michael Wood, who moved from Clinton county, N. Y., to Port Stanly, Canada, his father was Michael Wood also, and is supposed to have come from Connecticut. His mother was Amy Hunt, daughter of Elijah Hunt, son of Elijah Hunt, a revolutionary soldier of York state.

If you have anything in regard to either or both of those families, I would like to get it, or any names of the Watson family in England previous to 1636. We come from Col. Jonas Watson, the first lieutenant colonel of Royal Artillery under Marlborough. He also commanded a battery under King William in the Netherlands. He was baptized at Great Stoneford, Essex County, England, 1663, July 4th, the same day that his father Jonas was buried at 28 years of age. This Jonas was the son of Benjamin and wife Mary, and he was baptized in 1636.

ELEMENTS OF HISTORY.

I am pleased to notice your success in genealogical work. You are preserving the elements of history that would otherwise be lost.

Although at my age I am unable to keep up with the times and am giving away my books, I will enclose the price of a subscription to your magazine as a token of my appreciation of your work.

621. Mary Gamble[3] (4) (Thomas[2]), b. in Derby Co., Ireland in 1700; d. in Warren, Me., 17th Apr., 1786, married in Ireland, 1721, William Starrett, who was b. in Scotland, 15th Apr., 1694; d. 5th Mar., 1769, in Dedham, Mass. At the age of two years he escaped from Scotland with his parents, and took refuge in the north of Ireland, to gious belief. For three months he lay concealed with his parents in a cave in Scotland, waiting for an opportunity to escape to Ireland, then the home of persecuted Scots. From Ireland he emigrated to America about 1728, and settled in Pemaquid, Me. Some accounts say he settled in Londonderry or Derryfield, N. H.. In 1735, however, he moved to Warren, Me., and located on lot 40. Here he remained until the breaking out of the Indian war, known as King George's war, when he removed to Woburn, Mass., thence to Dedham, Mass., where he remained until his death. Havens in his Dedham Centenial address, mentions him as one of those in Dedham, who served during the last French war, from 1755 to 1763. Their military services were rendered at Ticonderoga, Fort Edward, Fort William Henry, Lake George, and other places in that direction westward; at Canada, northward, and at the Bay of Funda, and Louisburg at Cape Breton, eastward. Prior to the coming of William Starrett to this country, we find the name of James Starrett, among the first sixteen men with their families who settled in Londonderry, N. H., Apr., 1719. No further mention of him occurs in the history of Londonderry. In a list of training soldiers, under command of Capt. Domenicus Jordan, Falmouth, Me., 29th Apr., 1757, are the names of James and Joseph Starrett, and in the alarm list, Peter Starrett. In a deed of John Robinson to Stephen Jones, executed 27th June, 1740, is Peter Starrett as witness. In a record of marriage at Falmouth, now Portland, Me., is George Ferguson with Catherine Starrett, 17th Jan., 1736.

666. Margaret Starrett, (630) (David, Mary Gamble, Thomas) b. 16th Feb.; d. 1765; m. 14th Dec., 1786, James 2d., son of Henry and Martha (McNeil) McPherson, b. in Francestown, N. H., 4th Feb., 1762; d. 1839, aged 76 years. He was a farmer; res. Walden, Vt.

The McPhersons were Scotch-Irish emigrants, who came to this country about 1730 and settled in Chester, N. H. They were from the parish of Dumbo, county of Derry, Ireland, but originally from Argyleshire, Scotland. Paul McPherson, the emigrant and progenitor of this branch, settled in Chester, N. H. His children Samuel and Henry moved to Francestown; they changed the Ph to F in their names, still retaining the prefix Mc, which their sons James and James 2d dropped, under the impression that Mc denoted an Irish origin, which, a Scotchman, was a reflection not to be endured.

The McPhersons hold the tradition that the Starretts belonged to the same clan in Scotland to which they did, that of "Clan Chattan," some saying that a daughter of the family eloped with a British soldier, and to evade detection assumed the name of Starrett; others that a member of the family for political crime took the name to conceal his identity. It can be said of this family, that from the circumstances of living near each other, and their intermarriages, they have served to keep alive their early friendships in a remarkable manner. Few families have enjoyed more social gatherings, their habits being decidedly domestic, little disposed to speculation, but depend rather on their own hard work for a livelihood, and while few of them have occupied very conspicuous positions before the public, few have any cause to blush for their reputation, and though boasting no titled ancestry, have reason to thank a Divine Providence for the example of the noble men and women from whom they are descended. "May the children emulate the fathers."

678. Mary Starrett, (631) (David, Mary Gamble, Thomas) b. 28th Aug., 1786; James, son of Samuel and (Witherspoon) McFerson of Francestown, N. H. (See McPherson pedigree.) He was a man of a quick, impatient temper, but who always meant to do right. He was possessed of much energy and perseverance and was a hard working farmer. He commenced on his farm in Francestown when it was in a wild state, and succeeded in bringing it to a high state of cultivation. He built himself a nice one-story farm house, with all the necessary outbuildings, saw the wilderness literally become a fruitful field and lived to enjoy the fruits of the orchard he planted. His wife was a model Christian woman of gentle, quiet ways, whose memory was cherished by her children as a precious heritage. She was one of the best of friends and kindest of neighbors. James Ferson was a strict Presbyterian. He was called Hill Jimmie in contra-distinction to his cousin, who was called Bog Jimmie, and who married Peggy Starrett. Both names originated from the location of their farms.

790. Charles Henry Ferson[6], b. in Francestown, N. H., 30th Aug., 1819, m. 5th Nov., 1844, Nancy, dau. of Daniel and Susanna (Rawson) Stone of Grantham, N. H., b. 17th Aug., 1814. He received a good education at the common schools and at Francestown academy. He lived on his father's farm until 18 years of age, when he went to Bedford, N. H., and learned the brickmaker's trade. In 1840 he went to Boston, Mass., and began life for himself as a driver of a three-horse truck. He then went to Chelsea, Mass., and resumed his trade of brickmaking. This business he has since followed, with the exception of five years in a grocery store, and has been very successful. Since Chelsea was incorporated a city in 1857, he has much to do with city affairs. He was overseer of the poor in 1857 and 1858, and again in 1864 and in 1866. In 1860, 1861 and 1868, he was a member of the common council. In 1869 he was elected to the board of aldermen, but resigned to accept the position of city marshal, which he occupied through 1869 and '70. He was elected mayor in 1873 and twice re-elected to that office. In 1877, 1878 and 1879 he served on the school board, and in 1882 was again elected to the board to fill a vacancy and served as chairman. He was chosen a member for the House for 1879 and was made chairman of the important committee on roads and bridges, and served also on the committee on manufactures. He was re-elected to the House for 1880, and resumed his old place on the committee on roads and bridges. He is a Republican in politics, and though not often occupying the time of the House with speeches, he was fully capable of taking care of the reports of his committee on the floor of the House. s. p.

Vol. Inf., and was promoted to sergeant. The following account of his death was sent by a comrade to a Manchester, N. H., paper for publication: "Killed before Petersburg, Va., Sergt. James H. Ferson, Co. G, 9th N. H. Vol. He fell nobly fighting his country's enemies on the 30th July, 1864, while charging on a rebel fort and nearly there. When last seen he was in front of the company, calling upon them to come on. As a soldier he had no superior and few equals. His prospects for the future were flattering. The company tender his wife and friends at Francestown their sincere and heartfelt sympathy, and assure them that they deeply feel his loss, for he was greatly beloved and respected. We gave him a soldier's burial in a pleasant place where he will rest as quietly as at home, notwithstanding the roar of the cannon may sound continually over him. "Little he will reck if they let him sleep on in the grave where a soldier has laid him."

SOCIETY OF PLYMOUTH DESCENDANTS.

The Society of Plymouth Descendants of Eastern Maine met at Vinalhaven, Aug. 12, 1896.

The hospitable Carvers and others opened their doors and hearts and with profuse cordialty welcomed their cousins, some near and others very far removed. They were all here, the descendants of Miles Standish, Carver, Cushman, Winslow, Brewster, Bradford, Fuller and the other sturdy settlers who left their homes across the ocean and journeyed to this country in order to be free.

Immediately upon arrival the guests proceeded to the residence of the late Captain John Carver, one of the oldest houses on the island.

This was a very fitting selection as the old log cabin, probably the first erected here was on this lot, but a short distance from the present house, which was built by Thaddeus Carver something over 100 years ago. It is now occupied by Mrs. Jane Hopkins, a granddaughter of Thaddeus Carver.

The decorations of the grounds deserve more than passing mention. On entering the visitor passed beneath an arch inscribed "Welcome Pilgrim Descendants" and on coming inside he found he was indeed welcome. There were many tables arranged so that the visitors from each town could be by themselves. Thus, there was the Thomaston table, the Warren table, North Haven, Rockland, Camden, Friendship, Waldoboro and other tables. In all, probably about 400 people took dinner at the Carver homestead. The tables were bountifully laden with flowers and flags and bunting suspended overhead.

After the appetites of all had been satisfied, the party adjourned to the new Memorial hall, which was also handsomely decorated with bunting and flowers. Here the literary exercises were held, and while they were in session the hall was crowded.

After a prayer by Rev. C. F. Penney, D. D., the address of welcome was rendered by Rev. W. H. Littlefield, who said that two thoughts were uppermost in welcoming the descendants of the Plymouth Pilgrims, viz: First, the increase of family sociability and of the spirit of the Pilgrims; of personal independence, freedom and charity, sure to result from such a gathering.

ORATION.

By Hon O. G. Hall, of Augusta.

Judge Hall's oration occupied about an hour in delivery. We regret that we are unable to publish more than

the following extracts

It has become too much a fashion to belittle the work of the founders of New England. In essays of literary fops, from the platforms of orators in envious states, especially in the degenerate west, and sometimes in the sophomoric exploits of New England college students, the Pilgrims and the Puritans confounded together, are classed as a band of adventurers who left a despotism to become arch despots themselves. There is another class of apologists who wrong their memories as much "O" say these, "they did as well as they knew how. They lived in an age of fanaticism and must not be judged too harshly for their intolerance." This view makes no distinction between the Pilgrims of Plymouth and the Massachusetts colony. Yet, the distinction is vast, and must always be kept in mind when studying New England history.

To have a right conception of the character of the Pilgrims and their motives, we must first glance at the state of the world they left. When the Mayflower, with its hundred souls, anchored in Plymouth harbor, there was no place on the whole earth where so-called, civilized people dwelt, in which a human being could pray to his Maker in his own way (if his way was not the way provided by his government) without danger of being burned alive or torn in pieces by instruments of torture. And this was 1600 years after the angels of the Advent had proclaimed "Peace on earth, good will towards man." There was yet no peace without hypocrisy; no good will unless bought by crawling submission to despotism. The entire earth seemed seething with religious hate. Men and women were yet in the prime of life who saw the satanic butchery of St. Bartholomew, when 70,000 French Protestants were slain in a night to celebrate the birthday of a saint!

One of the French kings, Henry III, had been recently stabbed for the mere suspicion of not being blood thirsty enough towards Protestants. Another, Henry IV, his successor, had been assassinated as a Protestant, and the assassins of both kings had been rewarded as faithful sons of the church of Rome. Spain, with her slaughter mill, the inquisition, was a leading power of the world, and a despot ruled every leading nation. The infamous Emperor Ferdinand of Germany had opened a war of extirmination upon the Protestants of Europe, which was destined to drench it with blood through 30 awful years, and the shrieks of the slaughter of Prague were ascending to Heaven as the Pilgrims were hunting along the wintry coast of Massachusetts for a shelter. In all these countries it was a war to the death between Romanism and Protestantism, but in England a contest as fierce and relentless was being waged by the cowardly James I upon dissenters from the English church. He had sworn to exterminate them or "harry them out of the kingdom." There had been a slight rift in the clouds of religious persecution in Holland. This offered a ray of hope to English dissenters and several hundred sought refuge and freedom in that country. But the devil of religious hate pursued them there. Christians were cutting each others' throats over the doctrines of Calvin and Arminius, which tore the church into persecuting factions, and Spain was making ready to renew the fanatical war on that country. There was no peace nor good will for the Pilgrims there, and seeing the black clouds of persecution again arising, seeing

"Right forever on the scaffold Wrong forever on the throne."

in every so-called Christian land they resolved to leave it forever.

It is well, once in a while, to take a brief survey of what the Pilgrims really did to entitle them to the loyal respect and gratitude of their descendants.

In the first place they established here, for the first time in all history, a genuine democracy. The credit of this belong to the Pilgrims alone. The Puritan colony, 10 years later, was a plutocracy. No man could be a free man there unless he wore the badge of the church. In Plymouth there was no such requirement, but any man of respectable moral life was a voter. If not of moral life he forfeited his right to citizenship and became a ward of the state until he reformed, and who will maintain today that this was not right? The exigencies of party had not then demanded that the criminal, the vile and the outcast should be invested with the right to vote, with the possibility of state control.

We read of republics in ancient Greece, but the voters were of a limited class and few, and the slaves were many. The battle of Marathon, which gave the Spartan republic her greatest renown, was fought by the help of Italy on wealth and aristocracy. Not slaves unchained from their master houses. The Dutch republic arose on wealth and education; the republics of one of them was founded on the integrity of manhood and the dignity of work. It was reserved for the Pilgrims to plant such a republic, enduring as New England hills.

Our most characteristic institution in New England is the town system of government. Nothing like it exists elsewhere in the world. No feature of our system of government has had such far reaching influence on the destiny of the nation as this, and, as yet, there is nothing exactly like it in this country outside of New England. De-Toqueville, in his wonderfully clear treatise on "Democracy in America," pays this high tribute to this part of our system: "It is man who makes monarchies and establishes republics, but the township system of New England seems to have come directly from the hand of God." It was an invention of the Pilgrims of New Plymouth, although some attempt has been made by the descendants of the Massachusetts colonists to claim for that colony the establishment of this pivot upon which our government so easily plays and adjusts itself.

With the little congresses, the town meetings, where all the people may freely say their say and regulate their affairs and choose their official representatives and rulers, there is absolutely no danger to be apprehended to our institutions. Let socialism in its most obnoxious form find its blatant advocates; let anarchism flaunt its defiance to all government; let the timid tremble for social order amid the noise of demagogues and despair of the republic; so long as the town meetings of New England shall endure untrammelled, it is not in the power of men or devils to obstruct our onward and upward march toward the ideal government of Milton's splendid vision: "Methinks I see in my mind a noble and puissant nation, rousing herself like a strong man after sleep, and shaking her invincible locks; methinks I see her as an eagle mewing her mighty youth and kindling her undazzled eyes at the full midday beam." In the little forums of the town meetings, truth and falsehood may grapple, and whoever knew truth to be downed by falsehood in a fair field.

The strictness of the colonial laws in reference to dress, the habits of the people and the observance of the Sabbath, has been the subject of much ridicule in other states, especially in the south. It may not be generally known, however, that the laws of the Massachusetts colonies, especially of Plymouth, were mild compared with those of other colonies. It is true the Pilgrim Fathers provided by law that everybody should attend church on Sundays, Fast Day and Thanksgiving Days, under a penalty of five shillings for each neglect, and this seems quite severe, but it was mildness itself as compared with the law of the Virginia colony, whose descendants make so much sport of the Puritanism of New England. The Virginia law provided that if people did not go to meeting twice every Sunday they should be punished for the first absence from church by being starved for the week following; for the second offense, by being starved and whipped, and for the third offence they were hanged and sent where "Congregations ne'er break up, and Sabbaths never end."

It is universally conceded because too firmly imbedded in history for successful denial that the germ of this republic was planted by the Pilgrims. The Declaration of Independence was born in the cabin of the Mayflower. Their very first act was an act of independence. They agreed to establish a government, with no hint or though of asking leave of King James. Within 10 years the little democracy tried a man for murder, convicted, sentenced and hung him without any of England's help.

The criminal laws of England at that time were the bloodiest the world had known. They punished 157 crimes and misdemeanors by death; all of them by hanging, and many by horrible mutilation, and such was her criminal code down to the present century. The Pilgrims struck 149 of these from their criminal code, and with two or three exceptions, it has remained so to this day. They made a far reaching change in the laws of descent of real estate. Instead of following the English system of making the eldest son the heir to the exclusion of the other children, the Pilgrims adopted the old Saxon system of division among all the sons, with an important amendment, which for the first time, I think, included the daughters as the equal of the brothers in the distribution of the paternal estate. This law, the first great step in the direction of the rights of women, is the very safety valve of society against the over pressure of accumulated wealth; making a new deal of prosperity in every generation.

Judge Hall concluded as follows:

These, then, were the great works of the Pilgrims. They wove conscience into every act of life and ordered their government upon the same principles; they founded the first pure democracy on earth; by the town system of government they insured its perpetuity; they aided in developing the common school as the citadel of the people's safety; they established some laws more just and wise than any the world had seen and bound society together by an active faith in God, by a steel thread of personal fealty to truth and justice which extended through the nation and gave it power to win its independence in the fires of '76 and to unshackle 4,000,000 of slaves and save the union a generation ago. All honor to the Pilgrim Fathers. Let their names be ever spoken with reverence and their memory be ever sacred.

For many years before the Mayflower sailed, the people of the old world, ground down and oppressed, had heard of a wonderful city on this coast. Mariners, worn and weary, coming in from sea, with sublimated vision, had caught ravishing glimpses of its glittering towers and of its walls burnished with the splendors of sunset clouds. These reports came to men and women who were familiar with the description of the New Jerusalem in the vision of John at Patmos, before which was the "sea of glass, mingled with fire," with its walls of jaspar and its twelve gates each a different gem of splendor, and when they sighted this beautiful coast and sailed among the green islands of this glittering sea at set of sun, when the heavens were lit up with the pearl and opal glories of a Maine sunset, what wonder that here, on this very coast, they imagined a home of the blessed, and here gave to their fabled city, the Norumbega of their imaginings, a local habitation and a name. May that vision of the fabled city of loveliness, purity and grandeur be typical of what this land may yet, in the providence of God, become.

The following excellent, original poem was then delivered by L. F. Starrett of Rockland:

PILGRIMS.

Since the anchor of the Mayflower
Dropped in Plymouth Bay,
Years have vanished, and the Pilgrims
Crowding here today

Tell the story of the spreading
Of the sturdy stock,
O'er the ocean brought and planted
First at Plymouth Rock.

Though it seemed a foolish planting
In a shallow soil,
To it there was dedicated
Much of trust and toil.

Faith, and works, in combination
Do not often fail.
How the Pilgrim stock has flourished
Is an oft told tale.

In our own good state, as elsewhere,
Has it taken root;
We are, for the most part, samples
Of its goodly fruit.

Not the choicest, culled, selected,
And arranged for show;
Only just the common samples,
Gathered as they grow.

We, to glorious old tradition
Loyal through and through,
Count our Pilgrim blood the very Bluest of the blue.

English soil no truer subject
Than the Pilgrim trod;
But he would not give to Caesar
What belonged to God.

Where his conscience led he followed,
Scorning threat and bribe;
King no more than Pope his worship
Should for him prescribe.

So his country he abandoned,
Took his wife and child,
Crossed the sea, and dared the perils
Of the forest wild.

He had faith to trust the people;
There could never be,
In the state, he said, a tyrant,
While the town was free.

And this problem, new to statecraft,
He to solve essayed
By the solemn compact in the Mayflower's cabin made.

And the just adjudication
Of impartial time,
Back across the centuries looking,
Calls his faith sublime.

As my humble meed of tribute
Here I come to pay,
If you ask for my credentials,
This I have to say:

Though I come not to you bringing
Pilgrim's scrip and staff;
Half of me, at least, is Pilgrim,
And the better half.

And if anyone should question
Wherefore, how or why,
For such person's information,
This is my reply:

Picturesque was stout Miles Standish,
Armed from heel to head;
Lovely was the maid Priscilla,
Whom John Alden wed.

Brewster, Carver, Cushman, Winslow,
All of these were great;
Either might have been the founder
Of a model state.

But no greater name than Bradford's
In the list appears;
Bradford served as Plymouth's governor
More than 30 years.

Bradford, too, was their historian,
Much of what we know
Of their motives, trials, triumphs,
Unto him we owe.

It was he, who from their brethren
When their leave they took,
Wrote: "We knew that we were Pilgrims
And to Heaven did look."

Thus we see that we to Bradford
Owe the Pilgrim name;
And to all the rest conceding
Their deserved fame.

This I say: Than he to exile
None more worthy went;
And from him my good wife proudly
Claims direct descent.

THE FULLER CRADLE.

The following interesting article on the famous Plymouth Rock cradle was prepared by Gen. J. P. Cilley for the Pilgrim reunion at Vinalhaven:

The "Plymouth Rock cradle," which was on exhibition at the Centennial in 1876, at Philadelphia, was the old heirloom and property of Mrs. Mercy (Prince) Cushman. It was brought over by Dr. Samuel Fuller and his wife, Bridget Lee, of the Plymouth Pilgrims, and descended to Rev. Samuel Fuller[2], who married Elizabeth Brewster, a son of the doctor, thence to his son, Samuel Fuller[3], who married Mercy Eaton, thence to his son, John Fuller[4], who married Deborah Ring, and thence to a daughter, Deborah Fuller[5], who married Kimball Prince, and thence to a granddaughter, Mrs. Mercy (Prince) Cushman. There is still another similar, almost a duplicate, also claimed as the "Fuller Cradle." It is in the possession of Mrs. Jacob Noyes, also a lineal descendant of Dr. Samuel Fuller of the Mayflower. It is not probable that both of these cradles are from Dr. Fuller's family, as he did not have twins; but it is very singular that the only two "Mayflower" cradles which have survived "the crumbling touch of time" are these treasured heirlooms in the possession of the lineal descendants of Dr. Samuel Fuller and his wife Bridget Lee. It is an interesting fact that the descendants of Kimball and Deborah (Fuller[5]) Prince have in their veins the blood of more than 40 of the original Puritan and Pilgrim Fathers.

Deborah Fuller's pedigree can be traced back to 26 of the original Plymouth Pilgrims, viz: Dr. Samuel Fuller (1), of the Mayflower, and his wife Bridget Lee (2), the four of Elder Brewster's (3, 4, 5, 6), family, whose blood again mingles in the Prince family. Dr. Fuller's son, the Rev. Samuel[2] of Middleboro, b. 1623, d. Aug. 17, 1694, m. in 1656, Elizabeth, dau. of Jona. and Lucretia Brewster; she was a sister to Mary Brewster, the wife of John Turner, Sen. The Rev. Samuel Fuller[2]'s son Samuel[3] of Plympton, m. 1686 Mercy Eaton; Dea. John Fuller[4] of Kingston, b. 1698, who m. Deborah Ring b. 1698; m. 1763, was the dau. of Eleazer Ring and wife, Mary Shaw, who had 12 children. Eleazer Ring, b. 1650, m. 1687, was the son of Andrew Ring (7) and wife, Deborah Hopkins. Andrew, b. 1617, d. 1682, m. 1646, came over with a brother and sister and his mother (8), in 1628 (no mention of his father); he had five children, and was one of the first settlers of Middleboro; he had a second wife, widow, Lettys Mourton. Deborah Hopkins, b. 1622, was the daughter of Stephen Hopkins (9), and wife Elizabeth (10), who came in 1620. Mary Shaw, b. 1666, d. 1730, wife of Eleazer Ring, was the dau. of Jonathan Shaw (11), who m. in 1657 Pheba Watson, a dau. of George Watson (12), and wife Pheba Hicks (13), and a granddaughter of Robert Watson (14), and wife Elizabeth 15), who came with their son George in 1625. Pheba (Hicks) Watson came with her father, Robert Hicks (16), and mother Margaret (17), in 1621 and 23. Jonathan Shaw was the son of John Shaw (18), and wife Alice (19), who came before 1627, with Jona. and three other children. Mercy (Eaton) Fuller, wife of Samuel Fuller[3] of Plympton, descended from Francis Eaton (20), and wife Sarah (21), who came in 1620, with son Samuel (22), a nursing child. Francis, who d. 1633, had three wives; his last wife, Christian Penn (23), he m. in 1626; she came in 1623; she m. second time Francis Billington (24), in 1634, who came in 1620, with his parents John (25), and Eleanor (26), and his brother John. Francis was one of the original purchasers and settlers in Middleboro; he had a dau. Martha and eight other children; Martha, b. 1635, d. 1684, m. in 1661, Samuel Eaton, her mother's stepson; they had a dau. Mercy, who m. Samuel Fuller[4], son of Rev. Samuel Fuller[2] of Middleboro, also a son Samuel, who m. Elizabeth Fuller[5], a sister to his sister Mercy's husband.

The Fuller family of Knox county, on the researches of Deacon Calvin Bickford of Warren, trace their descent from Edward Fuller, a brother of Dr. Samuel Fuller, who came over with the doctor in the Mayflower. The only known reason why the Fuller family have not perpetuated their monopolistic grasp on cradles from Plymouth Rock to the present times, is the delinquent action of the present postmaster of Rockland.

BUSINESS MEETING.

At the business meeting of the Pilgrim association of Eastern Maine, the following committee was elected to complete the organization and report a list of officers for the ensuing year, viz: Isaac J. Burton, Warren, Captain George S. Carver, Vinalhaven, and James T. Creighton, Warren. This committee met at Captain Carver's residence, completed the organization and reported the following list of officers, viz: Captain George S. Carver, Vinalhaven, president; Jonathan P. Cilley, Rockland, secretary and treasurer; vice presidents, H. M. Noyce, Vinalhaven; John Bradford, Union; William Bradford, East Friendship; Geo. Standish, Waldoboro; John F. Burton, Cushing; Isaac J. Burton, Warren; Peter Hilt, Thomaston; Col. L. D. Carver, Rockland; genealogical committee, Oliver Davis, Cushing; Theodore Bradford, East Friendship; Isaac J. Burton, Warren; Mrs. Sarah Russell, Warren. The association adjourned to meet at such place as may be designated by the president and secretary, and on or near the date of Aug. 12, 1897.

The Geneological Dictionary of Rhode Island.

This work includes the early generations of settlers who came before 1690, embracing 466 distinct family names, over 11,000 individuals, dates of birth, marriage and death; abstracts of more than 1100 wills, etc., and various items of interest in the lives of the early inhabitants. Not only Rhode Islanders, and their descendants in every state in the union, but the general reader will find much of interest in its pages. A few brief extracts are given from the many reviews of this work:

"This Dictionary is indespensable to all who would study for themselves the inner history of Rhode Island."—Providence Daily Journal.

"In a summary way we get a picture of early New England life." "The critic feels like multiplying words in order to do justice to so great and so successful a labor as this."—N. Y. Nation.

"The people whose names are inscribed in its pages are scattered through every habitable part of the United States." "The time has come when intelligent men and women wish to know something about themselves and their ancestry."—Magazine of American History.

We have examined the above work and concur most heartily in the above commendations. — Editor Knox Co Hist. & Gen. Magazine.

900. Col. Thomas Starrett[5]; (625) (Mary Gamble[2], Thomas[1]); b. in Warren, 1738 on the lot 40 taken by his father at the first assignment of lots to settlers on Georges River, being the farm now owned by John Creighton at South Warren. About 1745 on account of Indian wars his father moved to Dedham, Mass., where his youth and early manhood were spent, and where he married 3d June, 1762, to Rebecca Lewis, by the Rev. Thomas Balch. In 1763, when peace had been concluded, and all apprehensions of further Indian hostilities had ceased, he returned to Warren and settled on the lot taken up by his father. There his six eldest children were born. About 1775 he exchanged this lot for one which was his homestead for the remainder of his days, and where his six youngest children were born; now owned by his great grandson Franklin, who occupies it. During the war of the Revolution he was a sturdy patriot, captain of the Warren Co. of militia, member of the town committee of public safety, and generally known as Col. Starrett. He represented his town in the Legislature in 1781, '84, '85 and '92, and held many responsible town offices, and considered one of the most "forehanded" men in town. Was deacon of the town church and universally esteemed and respected. After the death of his father in 1769 he brought his mother to Warren, built her a house and cared and provided for her until her death in 1786. He built on his new lot a frame house, one of the first in town, and about 1805 he built the large two-story house standing on the place. He died in Warren Jan. 22, 1822, and was buried in the town cemetery at the head of Main street. His twelve children survived him a number of years. They attained an aggregate age of nine hundred and ten years, and average nearly 76 years. The last born child, Mrs. Burgess, attained the greatest age, 87 years; the first born, Mrs. O'Brien, the next greatest, 84 years. He left at the time of his death, 84 surviving grandchildren, some others having been born after, and some having died previous to his death. Nearly all of his descendants were living in Warren at the time of his decease. Rebecca Lewis, his wife, was born at Dedham, Mass., 8th May, 1743, the daughter of Isaac and Mary (Whiting) Lewis. The marriage of her parents is thus recorded in the Dedham records. "Married by John Metcalf, Esq., Isaac Lewis of Stoughton and Mary Whiting of Dedham, April ye 10, 1734." The Whiting family was one of the oldest and largest families in Dedham and at one time they owned about the whole east part of the town. The names "Lewis and Isaac" have been, it will be observed, quite largely perpetuated in the descendants of Thomas Starrett and Rebecca Lewis. The descendants of Col. Thomas Starrett formed an association in the year 1880, holding their first meeting in September of that year at a grove upon his homestead farm; and a similar meeting has been held each year since at the beautiful grove upon the farm of Mr. I. P. Starrett in Warren. These successive meetings have been very pleasant as social gatherings, and interesting exercises have been held upon each occasion. In 1883 the officers of the association extended an invitation to other branches of the family to meet with them. As an appropriate testimonial to the memory of Col. Thomas Starrett a poem written for the first of these annual gatherings by his great granddaughter, Miss Susan Starrett was read by her on that occasion.

His father died when he was young. He left his native land and sailed for Quebec, Canada, as ship's steward, then returned home, when his guardian, Mr. Moore, sent him to Jamaica in a letter of Marque as supercargo and with merchandise to open a store. He was taken by a privateer commanded by Captain Babson and carried into Charleston, S. C., where he was retained as a prisoner. He came from there to Fox Islands with Captain Beverage and taught school in the family of Captain Wooster. As the British were seeking him he came to Warren and taught town school, and resided in the place now occupied by his grandson, William L. O'Brien.

He was an elegant penman and good accountant, but somewhat severe in the management of his scholars. This, however, was considered requisite in his day. He was town assessor for 17 years.

The O'Briens of Ireland claim descent from Brian Boromhe (Borsu), the 175th monarch of Ireland, son of Cineadgh, King of Thormond, b. A. D. 926 and slain at the battle of Clontarf on Good Friday, the 23d Apr., 1014. This Brian (brian Irish for very great strength), was the ancestor of O'Brian of Thormond, anglicised O'Brien. The place of inauguration of the O'Briens as Kings of Thormond, was at Magh Adhair, a place in the barony of Tullogh, County of Clare. Their battle cry was "Lamplaidir an Nachdoir," which means "the strong hand uppermost." They bore on their armorial ensigns "Three Lions Rampant." In modern times the O'Brien were marquises of Thormond, earls of Ichiquin and barons of Burren in the county of Clare; and many of them were distinguished commanders in the Irish brigade in the service of France under the titles of Earls of Clare and Counts of Thormond.

In 1855, on the death of James O'Brien, the 3d marquis, 7th earl and 12th baron, the titles of earl and marquis became extinct and the barony devolved on the Drumoland branch in the person of Sir Lucius O'Brien who died in 1872, and his son, Edward Donogh O'Brien, baron of Ichiquin, represents the title at the present time.

ELDER ELISHA SNOW.

A sketch prepared by Rev. W. O. Holman and read at the centennial of the old Baptist Meeting House, South Thomaston, Oct. 20, 1896.

In 1767, Elisha Snow, while seeking a good chance for lumbering, visited Wessaweskeag, and being struck with its singular water privilege, fine growth of heavy timber and other advantages for the purpose he had in view, immediately with his naturally keen discernment and business sagacity, took prompt measures for effecting an immediate settlement there. In connection with John Matthews of Plainfield, Conn., whom he induced to join him, he purchased a possessory claim of a British lieutenant, then stationed in Boston, but whose name has passed out of memory, to 300 acres of land, including the mouth of the Keag river, on which they erected a saw mill, and went to work on the lumber on the ground for payment.

Succeeding in this up to the measure of their expectations, Snow went to Boston for the purpose of completing the contract and procuring a deed. While there, so favorable an offer was made him that he concluded to purchase the entire tract of 1750 acres, and Matthews not being present with him took out a deed in his own name effecting a satisfactory settlement with his associate later. Paying what money he had, and giving his note, together with a mortgage of the whole tract as security for the balance, he returned to Wessaweskeag, well pleased with his bargain, which he never afterward had cause to regret.

Fortune, however, had not yet exhausted her favors, for the mortgagee having subsequently sailed for England in a ship that was never afterward heard from, was supposed to have been lost with the note and unrecorded mortgage, so that no payment was ever afterward demanded by any one, and no one ever was known to whom payment could be made, though the right of soil to make assurance doubly sure, was purchased of Mr. Fluker, the then owner of the whole Waldo patent, Nov. 18, 1773.

With this fortunate commencement, Snow and Matthews drove a thriving business which rapidly increasing attracted other settlers to the place. Among others was a Mr. Tenant, who had married a sister of Mathews, and who came soon after to the place and erected a small dwelling. Upon the outbreak of the American Revolution, he joined the American army and died at Plainfield, Conn., and leaving a widow and one son, Joshua Tenant.

He was followed in 1773 by Joseph Coombs and Richard Keating of New Meadows, John Bridges, a native of York and Thomas and Jonathan Orbeton, all of whom came either as hired men, or as immigrants, seeking an advantageous place of settlement. Snow built the first dwelling house, removing his family into it from Harpswell in 1771. Mathews built the second house. Both were low framed houses, containing two living rooms and a bed room. During this period Snow was present only at intervals, his brother Samuel superintending the erection of his buildings. To these later on was added a grist mill, which was run for several years when it was accidentally destroyed by fire. Snow also commenced to build vessels at an early period. The name of the first, built in 1787, is now unknown. Of this he, himself, took charge as captain, though how or when he had acquired a knowledge of the sea, can only be surmised. It was probably during his youth at Harpswell, which even at that period was quite a fishing and commercial town. His second vessel, built in 1795, was the schooner Betsey and Jenny, a craft of 90 tons. A year later, in connection with his sons, now grown to manhood he built a 100 ton schooner which was named the Sally. And in 1803 he built a schooner of 101 tons burthen, called the Hannah and Polly. Following these he built the Milo, in 1817, the Seven Brothers in 1819, the Mary Snow in 1820, the Shawmut in 1821, and the Francis in 1823. This is the last vessel that can be traced directly to him. The large tract of land originally purchased by Mr. Snow was subsequently divided into 16 sections and sold to as many different parties, who settled on them as farms, thus increasing the number of inhabitants and promoting the growth of that portion of the town. Around in every direction was the unbroken and primeval forest, most of it consisting of excellent timber of all sorts.

Strange as it may appear to us in these times in 1773 Mr. Snow opened the first general variety store at Wessaweskeag and took out the first license for the sale of liquor. Nothing was thought of it at the time. Everybody drank liquor from the parson down. It was good liquor and did not kill at 40 rods as the stuff retailed now is said to do.

As appears in the general history of the town the first religious movement was at Wessaweskeag, resulting in the organization of this church in 1784, with Elder Isaac Case as pastor. The gracious work spread over all the town. Among the converts were Mr. Snow, his wife, Betsey Jordan, to whom he had been married at Cape Elizabeth Dec. 6, 1759, and their four children. It would seem that at an earlier period of life, Mr. Snow had been deeply impressed on the subject of religion. During the exciting scenes of the Revolution he had lapsed into indifference, but his awakening under Elder Case's preaching was very thorough and his conversion genuine and radical.

Such was the depth and sincerity of his contrition that even to his enemies of whom he had a number, growing out of the frictions of business and the animosities rendered by the Revolution and by politics, it seemed cruel to call it in question. So tender and ardent were his convictions and his newborn regard for the cause of Christ that when the question of uniting with the church came up, fearing that it might awaken old animosities he joined the church at Harpswell, leaving the Wessaweskeag field to Elder Case, who, by marriage to his daughter Joanna, had become his son-in-law. He must have been licensed to preach by the Harpswell church, for shortly after, he exercised his gifts as an Evangelist in Framingham and other towns in Massachusetts.

In June, 1792, Elder Case resigned his charge of the church and removed to Readfield. Soon after the removal of Mr. Case an unhappy dispute arose in the church, chiefly in reference to the doctrine of the atonement. Mr. Snow believed, and consequently contended that the atonement was limited to the elect; that they alone, by virtue of their having been given to Christ from all eternity would be saved, the claim of justice having been satisfied in their behalf, and affirming that if Christ had died for all, all must of necessity be saved.

Such a purely commercial view of the atonement, so much suffering for so much sin, and the partiality shown in arbitrarily confining the benefits of the transaction to a few, did not meet the views of some of his hearers. Among these, the leading dissenter was Deacon Samuel Brown, who held that Christ died for all, and that all, by complying with the required conditions might obtain salvation through Christ's merits and death. Each had his adherents in the church, and the dispute finally resulted in the exclusion of Deacon Brown and 33 others who agreed with and substantiated him. Such a controversy now would be impossible—Deacon Brown, considering his party to be the church, retained the records. He afterwards removed to Ohio, carrying the records with him and they were never recovered.

The church thus purged, as it believed, of heresy, invited Mr. Snow to become its pastor, and he accepted the invitation. He was ordained Sept. 27, 1794. Under his ministry the church prospered and increased in membership, though not rapidly or by any considerable accessions at any one time. His preaching was largely doctrinal and to those fond of such preaching, highly interesting. "From his abrupt energy of expression, apt illustration and unflinching adherence to a point regardless of consequences, however scathing, he seldom failed to gain the attention of every hearer." Those who differed from him were often amused, while others who agreed with him, were edified and confirmed in their sentiments.

As a disciplinarian, he was strict, and though remarkable for abruptness of speech he was exceedingly affable and kind in his intercourse with the people.

In 1808 a great awakening occurred under the labors of Mr. Snow, aided by Rev. Samuel Baker and ultimated in the greatest revival ever experienced in the town. Not far from 150 converts were received into the church. The work lasted several months.

The Rev. Mr. Baker, who had been a Methodist professed a change of views in regard to baptism, and, on Feb. 4, 1808, was immersed and received into the church and ordained March 31, as Mr. Snow's colleague. He was then young, gifted with literary tastes, and his preaching very different from Mr. Snows, proved very attractive. His views of the atonement were those for which Deacon Brown, and a portion of the church had been excluded, and reasoning that if Christ died for all, all must be saved, he became a Universalist, and after having enjoyed the confidence of the church for about five years, was excluded for purely doctrinal reasons in 1813. The same year he was elected representative to the general court. In 1814 he recanted and was restored to membership in the church. Mr. Snow continued sole pastor of the church until June 21, 1821, when, having resigned, Rev. Samuel Fogg, fresh from the Theological seminary at Waterville, was ordained as his successor. Mr. Snow lived several years after this, cordially co-operating with his successors and blessing the church with his presence and help, and died Jan. 30, 1832, greatly beloved and universally lamented.

GENERAL KNOX AND THE LOYALISTS.

BY CAPT. ROBERT GOLDTHWAIT CARTER, U. S. Army.

Most historical readers in Maine, and especially in Knox county, are doubtless very familiar with the life of the bluff old soldier, Washington's favorite general, who, without previous military training, he made his chief of artillery, to whom he intrusted thedifficult and important duty of securing and transporting through the almost trackless waste of forest, the guns captured in the campaign against Canada to the Continental Army at Cambridge; and upon whom, when president, he conferred the honor of secretary of war.

His home, which after his retirement from public life, he selected at Thomaston, Me., is also well-known to the present generation. Many incidents and glimpses of his private life and character have been shown forth in such letters and correspondence as were accessible to the authors who have so faithfully drawn upon them. It was, however, the good fortune of the writer to have the privilege of examining quite recently, the Knox collection of papers, now in the possession of the N. E. His.-Gen. Society of Boston, and the following incident connected with Gen. Knox's early service in Boston, and later, may prove of interest.

The lines had begun to be tightly drawn among the so called Tories or Loyalists, and the Whigs or Patriots about Boston and all suspected persons were constantly under the surveillance of the committees of correspondence and safety appointed for the purpose of giving such information concerning their doings as might be of importance to the continental authorities.

From about 1753 there had lived in the town of Marlboro, Mass., a wealthy merchant by the name of Henry Barnes. He was an extensive importer of general merchandise in Boston, and a very pronounced Royalist.

Just prior to the outbreak of the War of Independence, he is cited as one who, in spite of a warning of the consequences of such an act, by the non-importing association, still stubbornly persisted in importing goods and defying them, and his name was published in Edes & Gill's Almanac for 1770, as follows:

"A list of the names of those who audaciously continue to counteract the United Sentiments of the Body of Merchants throughout North America by importing British goods, contrary to the agreement. . . . Henry Barnes (Trader of the Town of Marlboro.)" And in the Boston Town Records is given the minutes of a meeting in Marlboro, as follows: "Therefore—In Town Meeting, March 19, 1774, at 9 o'clock—It was solemnly resolved that the name of Henry Barnes and other names (few indeed to the Honor of the Town), be entered on the Records of this Town that Posterity may know who those persons were that preferred their little private advantage to the common interest of all the Colonies in a point of the greatest importance, who not only deserted, but opposed their country in a struggle for the Rights of the Constitution that must ever do it honor. And who with a design to enrich themselves, basely took advantage of the generous self denial of their fellow citizens for the Common Good."

March 29, 1774- In Town Meeting- An Article: "To see whether the town will do anything to strengthen the hands of the merchants in their non-importation agreement." John Warren Moderator. Hezekiah Maynard, Peter Bent and Robert Baker, having been appointed a committee, submitted the following very spirited and patriotic report, which was adopted by the town transmitted to the Boston Committee, and published in the Boston Evening Post:

Voted—That we ourselves, or by from or under us, will not directly, or indirectly, purchase any goods of . . . and Henry Barnes of Marlboro aforesaid (being importers) until a general importation shall take place, or they come into the Non-Importation Agreement of the Merchants to their satisfaction."

VI. Resolved and Voted That the names of those who purchase goods of the importers, or those who buy of the Importers, shall be made public as far as we have any knowledge of them."

During the seige of Boston, Gen. Knox sent the following petition to the Provincial Assembly.

"To the Honourable Council and the Honourable House of Representatives, in General Court, assembled in Watertown:

May it please your Honours:—The peition of Henry Knox humbly showeth that your petitioner having been obliged to leave all his goods and house furniture in Boston, which he has no prospect of getting possession of again, nor any equivalent for the same, begs your honourable Court, if they in their wisdom see fit, to permit him to exchange house furniture with Henry Barnes, late of Marlboro which he now has it in his power do.

Your petitioner, as in duty b und shall ever pray.

(Signed) HENRY KNOX.

Nov. 6, 1775.

Watertown, Nov. 26, 1775.

Resolved, &c., That the petition have leave to make use of the by giving receipts to the Com. of Correspondence, or Selectmen of the town of Marlboro for what he shall receiv and to be accountable to this Court for the same.

(Signed) J. WARREN.

Now follows the petition of the niece of Henry Barnes:

"To the Hon. the Council and the House of Representatives of the Province of Mass. Bay in General Court assembled at Watertown.

Dec., 1775.

The petition of Katharine Goldthwait, niece and adopted daughter of Henry Barnes, Esq., late of Marlborough- Humbly Sheweth:

That by an explanatory resolution passed by the Provincial Congress on the 8th day of July last, no estate of persons fled to Gen. Gage, should b taken possession of by the Selectmen or Com. of Correspondence of any town, excepting such estates as were left unimproved and void of any occupants of possessor.

That the said Henry Barnes at the time of his departure from Marlborough to Boston, left your petitioner (who hath resided with him near seventeen years) with part of his family in possession of his estate in M., who has peaceably occupied the same ever since, but the Com. of Correspondence of said Town, supposing the said estate to come under their cognizance, have entered into the same, sold part of the effects and purpose to dispossess your petitioner and the rest of the family from the occupation thereof.

Your petitioner would further represent that she has offered and is still willing to give the said Committee ample security for payment of the amount of said estate during the continuance therein, and also for the delivery of all the personal effects which remain unsold, but they have refused to accept the same, and she being entirely destitute of any place to reside in, begs the interposition of this Honourable Court in her unhappy situation and that your Honours would please recommend to the said Committee to suspend their proceeding herein, and give directions for your petitioner to improve the said estate upon giving security for the payment of the rent to the said committee until the Spring ensuing, when she hopes to be accommodated elsewhere, or give such orders respecting the same as to equity and justice may appertain.

And your petitioner as in duty bound will ever pray.

(Signed)
CATHARINE GOLDTHWAIT

Endorsement:—

Watertown, Dec. 12, 1775.
(Council Records.)

Committee appointed upon foregoing petition beg leave to report by way of Resolve as follows: Dec. 18, 1775.—Resolved—That the Petitioner notify the Committee of Correspondence of the town of Marlborough by serving them with an attested copy of the petition and order therein, that they show cause, if any they have, on Friday, the 22d inst., at 10 o'clock in the forenoon, why the prayer thereof should not be granted, and that all further proceedings by the said Committee respecting the Premises be staid in the meantime."

The above Com. were Mr. Rice, Col. Porter and Col. Mitchell. (Forces Am. Arch. Vol. 3, Proceedings of Ho. of Reps., Dec., 1775.)

In Vol 1, Forces Am. Arch. p. p. 1261-7, will be found in full, an intensely interesting and amusing account in Ensign D'Berniere's narrative describing the adventures of himself and Captain Brown of the British Army, who, early in 1775, were sent by Gen. Gage through Concord, Worcester, and other towns to make topographical sketches of the country, locate military stores, etc., which the Whigs were known to have been collecting, and which was his (Gage's) intention to destroy later by an expedition.

One night, about dark, they arrival at Henry Barnes' house at Marlboro in the midst of a raging snow storm. Spies had been watching and seen them enter the town; they were nearly famished and exhausted and benumbed with cold, they sought shelter with him, and were about to partake of his hospitality when the village doctor came, and calling Barnes outside the house, announced that he had come to sup with him. He had not been near the house for over two years!

Barnes was in a quandary; he, however, told him that he could not have him that night as he had company. This enraged the doctor, who called one of the children to him, and upon questioning her, found out that the two strangers who had been seen to enter the town and were suspected to be British officers in disguise, were the company.

Soon after the doctor's departure, the villagers commenced to congregate. Barnes, alarmed, warned the two officers of their extreme peril, and urged them to flee, saying that he could no longer harbor them. Taking them out through a back door into the howling storm, pointing out their line of retreat, and placing some bread in their hands, which they ate and washed down with snow as they ran, they fled through the fields and woods in the darkness of this wild, tempestuous night, until they struck the main road, thence made their way into Boston after many hardships, where they arrived nearly dead with fatigue and hunger.

Barnes' house was searched from attic to cellar, the enraged patriots even looking under all the beds, and he was told that had the spies been found, it was their intention to pull the house down over his head. Horsemen were sent out on all the roads, but the fugitives had made good their escape. Barnes told the people that they were not the king's officers, or spies, but "some relations of his from Penobscot, and that they were going to Lancaster."

Soon after this, abandoning his house to the care of the niece referred to, he sought shelter with the British in Boston, from whence, after many trials and tribulations during which he was captured and held a prisoner in Rhode Island for a short time while trying to escape from Boston, he arrived in England sometime in 1777, never to return, and died at Bristol in 1808.

Very little is known concerning Henry Barnes; even Lorenzo Sabine, the indefatigable historian and author of "The American Loyalists," almost despaired of finding anything authentic relating to those misguided people who fled by thousands from Boston at its evacuation by the British troops in 1776 and left no papers or records behind. Many returned but more died in Canada, Nova Scotia and England, and passed into oblivion.

Such was the case of Henry Barnes. Even the author of the History of Marlboro confesses that beyond living there from about 1753 to 1775 he can learn nothing of him. There are no records of the births of his children, no papers, no letters, nothing to identify him with the town, his name, except so far as relates to the one resolution condemning him, quoted in this paper, seems to have been expunged from the town's books.

The writer has been unable to learn anything concerning him, except that in some way, not yet exactly determined, he, or his wife Christian, were related to Admiral Marriott Arbuthnot of the British navy, and that one of his sisters, Elizabeth, married in 1748, Nathaniel Coffin of Boston, Cashier of Customs under the Crown, two of whose sons were Sir Isaac Coffin, Bart., born in Boston in 1759, and the first American admiral of the British navy, and Sir John Coffin, Bart, born in Boston in 1755, and Lieut.-General of the British army, while another sister, Catharine, married Col. Thomas Goldthwait of Boston.

Henry Barnes is frequently mention by Judge Samuel Curwen, an admiralty judge and a prominent refugee from Salem, Mass., as also by Gov. Thomas Hutchinson, in their published diaries, and probably with them belonged to that famous Brompton Row Tory club, who congregated almost daily with Sir William Pepperell and others at the New England coffee house on Thead-Needle street, London to discuss their wrongs and the best methods of righting them—always with a most natural and pathetic yearning "for their own, their native land."

The niece, Catharine Goldthwait, who has been referred to, and petition quoted, was the daughter of Col. Thomas Goldthwait, secretary of war in 1761-3 of the Province of Mass. Bay under Sir Francis Bernard, and who held many offices under the crown, but who will be of more interest to the reader of this paper from the fact that from 1763 to 1775 he was the commandant of old Fort Pownall at the mouth of the Penobscot river, as also truck master, or official agent for all the Indians of that region, and at the same time agent for the Waldo heirs in the great Waldo Patent, from whom, through his wife, Lucy Flucker (whose father, Thomas Flucker, the last Royal Secretary, married Hannah Gen. Samuel Waldo's daughter) Gen. Knox acquired his great wealth.

Catharine Goldthwait married Sept. 1, 1784, at Poole, England, Dr. Sylvester Gardiner, the famous surgeon of Boston, who, when he had fled to Nova Scotia, and Gen. Washington had confiscated his immense stock of drugs paints and chemicals for the use of the Continental army at Cambridge, wrote a characteristic letter to a friend from Halifax, in which he termed the great commander-in-chief "That thief, Washington!" He was one of the largest landed proprietors in America, owning, it is said, 500,000 acres of land in the Kennebec purchase, much of which lying along the Kennebec river, he developed after the war, about Pittston, Hallowell and Gardiner, the latter of which was named in his honor, and in the Episcopal church of which there is a marble cenotaph erected to his memory, although his remains were interred in Newport, R. I., where he died Aug. 8, 1786.

She (Catharine G.) married for her second husband, April 2, 1789, a wealthy West India merchant of Boston, William Powell, another famous man of that period, who is given in the history of Samuel Adams by Wells, in Frothingham's siege of Boston and other authorities as one of the Com. of Correspondence and Safety of Boston, with Samuel Adams, James Otis, Joseph Warren, William Molineux and others at different times, and "for several years prior to the Revolutionary War, he appears as a member of Committees on great occasions where judgment and decision were demanded with the name of Samuel Adams at the head as chairman."

One of her husbands was an aristocrat, a Loyalist and a Refugee, who was proscribed and banished, as was Henry Barnes and warned not to return "under penalty of death without benefit of clergy," while the other, although an aristocrat, was a staunch Whig and a most uncompromising Patriot. She, herself, upon a petition being presented to the Provincial Assembly for permission to join her father, Col. G., who had left Penobscot in September, 1779, after the siege of Bagaduce, on the Le Blonde frigate, Commander Andrew Barclay, and was then in New York was granted the privilege and a pass was given her by Gen. Washington to leave the state, but she was warned that she "must not return," nor did she until about 1785, after her marriage with Dr. Gardiner.

After his death, a correspondence passed between Madame Catharine Gardiner and Gen. Henry Knox relating to an indemnity for the loss of the furniture he had obtained from Henry Barnes, which it seems he held, notwithstanding her petition to the General Court for its restitution, for the writer has found a rough draft of a letter from him among the Knox papers in Boston. It is as follows:

This is given with all corrections, interlineation, &c., as in the original;

N. York, March 31, 1787.

To Mrs. Gardiner--

Madam:--I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant containing a copy of your former one relative to some household furniture, formerly the property of Mr. Barnes of Marlbro, which was delivered to me by the government of Massachusetts in 1775

The sole reason of my receiving any of Mr. Barnes' furniture was an application on his part to me for permission to take some of mine in Boston in lieu of his in Marlbro.

^Major Urquhart, who married Mrs. Knox's sister, communicated to me the application and supposed that Mr. Barnes availed himself of such part of mine as he thought proper.

The Com. of Marlbro who possessed Mr. Barnes' furniture declined to deliver any part thereof unless by order of the Provincial Convention then sitting at Watertown. On application to that body they authorized me to receive such articles as I thought necessary by my giving them an obligation for the amount agreeable to an appraisement of the Marlbro Committee. Accordingly articles to the amount of £100—lawful money of that date were received of the Committee on my account.

You will observe by this statement Madam that I cannot in any degree be responsible to Mr. Barnes even although he should not have received any of my furniture in exchange. But I shall be happy to be instrumental in any degree compensating Mr. Barnes obtaining compensation for any losses he may have suffered and therefore will readily comply with your request in transmitting you the certificate of the transaction in order to found an application for compensation in England, which I imagine would be the shortest and most efficient mode.

I am, Madam, &c.

(Signed) HENRY KNOX.

Note—This letter was furnished me through the courtesy of J. Ward Dean, Esq., of the N. E. His.-Gen. Society.

*Major Urquhart was town major (Provost Marshal, I presume of Boston during the siege.

1031. Hon. Edward O'Brien⁵, (913) (Mary Starrett⁴, Thomas³, Mary Gamble², Thomas¹); b. in Warren, Me., 24th July, 1793; d. in Thomaston, Me., 6th May, 1882; m. 16th May, 1820, Mary Starrett (945). His education was acquired in the schools of his native town, and he worked at home with his father until the age of 21, when, having a strong desire to go to sea, he pursued the business of coasting for a few years, but having mechanical ability he commenced work in the shipyard of the late John H. Counce of Warren, receiving for his wages $1.25 per day. After working with Mr. Counce until 1823, and becoming a partner with him in shipbuilding, Mr. O'Brien concluded to commence business on his own account. In this, he disclosed one of the strong traits of his character since so well developed, a desire to be independent, to have sole control where his own interests were immediately involved. Possibly this predominant trait was the grand secret of his almost unparelleled success.

In 1823 he built a brig in Friendship for Col. John Burton, and the following year he built two vessels at Oyster River for Mr. William Kelsey. In 1825 he commenced building his own shipyard of the shores of Georges River, it being apart of the home farm; five vessels were built this year and the first launched was caller the "William." Here he continued to build every year until 1853, sometimes launching two or three vessels in a year. In 1854 he built his first ship, the S. Curling, in Thomaston, in his shipyard near the old toll bridge. In 1858 he built and sent to sea the ship Mary E. Campbell, 1700 tons burden, with all her bills paid and owning every timber head in her." This was the first instance in the state of Maine, where one individual had been the sole owner of a ship of her size and value. Since the times" resulting from the financial revolution of 1873, Mr. O'Brien constructed the following named ships, owning each one exclusively: "Alida," "Belle O'Brien," "Baring Brothers," "Alexander Gibson," "Frank Curling," "J. B. Walker," "General Knox." He built and was the owner of more than one hundred vessels in all. Nearly all the above named ships are engaged in the Pacific trade, sailing either to Callao or San Francisco, carrying out coal and returning with either guano or wheat. All the coal carried in these ships was for the account of Mr. O'Brien, he thus being the owner of both ship and cargo. Since about 1867, Mr. O'Brien has been his own insurer, both on ships and cargo. While he did insure, the best insurance companies in New York and Boston considered the risks on his vessels among the safest of any in the country, consequently the rates were proportionately low. In addition to this excellent reputation, we may add the well known fact that through his own mechanical skill and good judgement he developed a model which was almost perfect. It was frequently remarked that all his ships very lightly sparred, yet in spite of this, and although they carry much larger cargoes in proportion to their tonnage than any other vessels in the same trade, yet they manage to make as quick passages as any sailing vessels.

As an instance we give one voyage of the ship J. B. Walker, Captain Wallace. This ship took from San Francisco the largest cargo of grain ever shipped up to that date, about thirty-three hundred tons, carried the same to Liverpool, and then took in twenty-two hundred tons of coal and returned to San Francisco in 255 days, thus making the round voyage in eight and a half months. After the year 1839, Mr. O'Brien employed a master builder, previously, he had made all of his moulds and models. In 1873, at the age of eighty years, he greatly changed and improved his ship model, making it in accordance with his well considered and matured ideas. In 1839 Mr. O'Brien with the late Amos H. Hodgman of Warren, was the first to embark in the project of procuring white oak timber from the south. Traveling over Virginia, the two purchased a large tract of timber land, and cut several frames, which he brought home to use. This was the first timber brought from the south to Maine, a business which has since been successfully pursued. In 1853 Mr. O'Brien traveled through Georgia and there established John Bailey in the business of procuring pine lumber, which was brought to Thomaston and sawed in the mill he had erected,

Mr. O'Brien did not confine his energies to shipbuilding alone, and although he had created a fleet of which he might well be proud, he interested himself in many other enterprises, in all of which he has shown extraordinary tact and sbrewdness.

In 1843, he, with William C. Burgess, formed a copartnership of O'Brien and Burgess, and bought the store, wharf and kilns then owned by the late George Robinson above the bridge. Subsequently, Watts and Elliott having purchased Boynton and Miller's store, and wharf, Mr O'Brien took Elliot's interest in the new property, and Samuel Watts was admitted as a member of the firm, under the style of O'Brien, Watts and Co. Here they conducted a general merchandise business for a number of years, until Mr. O'Brien retired from the business. He was succeeded in the firm of O'Brien and Burgess by his son, Edward Ellis, and nephew, E. K. O'Brien, who are now large manufacturers of lime. Mr. O'Brien was one of the principal movers in establishing the Georges bank, which was organized in 1852, and afterward become the Georges National bank.

He was chosen president in that year and remained at the head of the institution till 1879, with the exception of two years, and continued until his death as one of the directors. During the financial panic of 1857, when the banks throughout the country were suspending "specie payments," he established the confidence in his bank, by announcing that he held a balance in gold with Baring Brothers, London more than sufficient to cover every bill to which he had placed his signature as president, and that he did not propose to allow his name to go to protest under any circumstances. He had an open account with the above great banking house for fifty years, at times having large balances to his credit.

The failure of the Pacific National Bank of Boston brought dismay to many of the citizens of Thomaston, who were stockholders in that Institution. Both the Georges National and Thomaston National Banks had large balances on deposit in the "Pacific," in each case enough to cripple them. Mr. O'Brien promptly came to the rescue, and drew sterling bills on London sufficient to supply the wants of the Georges Bank, and at the same time offered assistance to the Thomaston Bank. His liberal action gave to both banks a feeling of confidence, which aided them through their troubles. In 1871 Mr. O'Brien started a shoe factory in Thomaston, which was in operation a little more than two years, when owing to heavy losses in Boston, resulting from the great fire in that city, the affairs of the concern were placed in the hands of his nephew, E. K. O'Brien, to clear up. The total loss amounted to about $40,000. Mr. O'Brien was quite affected by this reverse. He had never expected to realize any great profit from the shoe factory, his sole purpose being, that such an institution would be beneficial to the town, and that while contributing to that end his investment would be safe. If he had lost the same amount in his regular business he would have accepted it, as he did his other losses, philosophically. However, a year or two after winding up the factory, he became reconciled to his loss, and remarked to a friend one day that he was "glad he had started that shoe factory after all, for if he hadn't, he might have died without finding out what a big fool he was." In addition to Mr. O'Brien's interests in Thomaston, he was also the owner of considerable property in real estate in Boston, Mass., Brooklyn, N. Y., and Dakota Territory. In 1866 he established the ship chandlery store of O'Brien, Gilchrest & Co., in Wall St., New York, which in a few years was sold to Gilchrest, White & Co. In 1864, Mr. O'Brien and Chapman and Flint built a block of houses on Montague Terrace, Brooklyn, at a cost of $175,000. He owned two of the houses. In 1876, Mr. O'Brien owned two large wharves in Boston, and established a business in coal, wood, lime, cement, sand, bricks and laths, which is carried on by his agent, formerly a master of his vessels, Randall G. Morse, and had about $180,000 in this investment. In 1848, Mr. O'Brien was the prime mover in having the telegraph line extended to Thomaston, and was one of the first directors in the Maine Telegraph Co. He was also a large stockholder in the Boston Marine Insurance Co. Mr. O'Brien has held many offices of public trust, and always to the satisfaction of his fellow townsmen both in Warren and Thomaston. During his residence in Warren he was selectman in the years 1829, '30, '31, '35, '36, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43 and '44. Assessor, 1830 and '31. Representative, 1825, '36, '37 and 1839. Justice of the peace, 1834 to 1840, and state senator three terms.

In 1863 Mr. O'Brien went abroad, visiting England, Ireland and France. When in Ireland he visited the birthplace of his father.

In 1847, Mr. O'Brien removed to Thomaston and took the house formerly owned by the late George Robinson, and now occupied by his brother, David O'Brien, Esq. A few years later he built the residence in which he lived until his death. He was a Unitarian and he was one of the founders and most liberal supporters of this church in Thomaston. In politics he was a life long Democrat, but never a politician in the common acceptation of the term.

Mr. O'Brien was a tall man, some six feet or more in height, very active and of robust frame, blue eyes and fair complexion. He was a great reader and his fund of knowledge, both by acquirement and observation, was extensive. He kept his own correspondence, which with ships in all parts of the world, was necessarily very large and gave personal attention to all of his business matters. He was of a genial and hearty nature, fond of good company, and particularly fond of a good story. His wonderful memory assisted him greatly in relating anecdotes of the ancestors of the present generation. He was an upright, honorable, square-minded man in all business relations, and as a citizen he was benevolent and kind to the poor and needy. Besides thousands of gifts, which year after year he bestowed upon the poor, he made the following deed of gift to his native town of Warren:

"Whereas, the town of Warren being my native town, therefore, I, Edwin O'Brien of Thomaston, in the county of Knox, do hereby give, grant and transfer to the town of Warren, in said Knox county, the sum of Ten Thousand Dollars in money, to be sold in trust by the said town forever, for the following purposes, to wit:

Said fund is to be invested in some safe security, and the annual interest or income thereof, or so much of the same as shall be found necessary, shall from time to time be distributed, or be expended in the purchase of fuel and other necessaries of life, to be given or sold at low prices, as may be deemed best by the trustees, to such worthy and industrious persons as are not supported in whole or in part at the public expense, but who may need some aid in addition to their own labor to enable them to sustain themselves and their families during the inclement season of the year; such aid to be afforded in the most private manner possible and the name of the recipient to be withheld from the public.

Said fund shall be known as "The O'Brien Charity Fund of the Town of Warren," and invested and managed by the selectmen and treasurer of said town of Warren for the time being, or a majority thereof. In no event shall any part of the principal of said fund be expended for said purposes. And it is further the special request of the donor of the fund, that no idlers, loafers or gamblers, receive any benefit from said fund; also that suitable persons, either male or female, be selected in each neighborhood to see who are needy and eligible to receive aid as aforesaid; also that proper books be kept by the treasurer of said town with this writing recorded therein, together with true and perfect entries, showing how said fund is invested, with the income and amounts paid out annually; also a report to be made to the town annually.

In 1878 he bestowed a similar gift in amount to the poor of Thomaston.

At the third annual gathering of the descendants of Col. Thomas Starrett, held at the grove of I. P. Starrett, near the shore of the North Pond, Warren, the president of the association, William Cary Burgess, paid a most appropriate tribute to his memory. The following poem, written by L. F. Starrett, Esq., for the occasion, appropriately closes the biography of this eminent business man:

Gathered in kinship here,
For one to many dear,
  Mourn we today;
Who four-score years and ten
Well nigh had finished when Death from his fellow men
  Took him away.

Born not to place or power,
But with a richer dower;
  With a clear brain,
Hands that were skilled to do,
Heart to its purpose true,
And so he early grew
  Strong to attain.

How very few have been Able through life to win
  So much as he,
Who with such princely tread
So many rivals led,
Till his ships' sails were spread
  On every sea!

But not as so much pelf
Just to enrich himself,
  Held he his store;
That which he might attain
Oft was another's gain,
Seldom desert in vain
  Knocked at his door.

Often his generous deed
Sought out the home of need,
  Help to extend;
And when he passed away,
Many could truly say
That when they lost him they Lost their best friend.

Quiet in all his ways,
Not seeking human praise,
  What his right did
But his example grew
Until the light it threw
  Could not be hid.

And now—his spirit passed
Unto his God at last,
  His God who gave—
His kinsmen here today
Proudly their tribute pay,
And their poor chaplet lay
  Upon his grave.

Correction by Wm. Rowell, Creston, Iowa.

In reading from the Knox County Historical and Genealogical Magazine, a "sketch read by Rev. W. O. Holman at the centennial of the old Baptist meeting house, South Thomaston, Oct. 20th, 1896," I saw an error which probably found its way from Eaton's History. Mr. Holman says: "Among others who were attracted to the place was a Mr. Tenant (Joshua Tenant), who had married a sister of Mathews, and who joined the American army and died at Plainfield, Conn., and leaving a widow and one son, Joshua Tenant." To be correct it ought to read, leaving a widow and one daughter, Hannah Tenant. Hannah Tenant married Jonathan Maker; she was the mother of eleven children as recorded in Eaton's History, but the order of the births of the last two ought to be reversed. The romantic part of this story as told to me by my father, the late Rice Rowell, is that when Ruth (Mathews) Tenant heard of the sickness of her husband, she mounted a horse in South Thomaston, took her baby, Hannah Tenant, in her arms and rode to Painfield. On her way, in passing within the lines of the American army, she was intercepted by William Rowell, her future husband. What words were used between them, tradition saveth, not. After the close of the war, William Rowell sought her, found her in South Thomaston and married her.

He was educated in the public schools of his native town, and in 1850 left his native town and state and secured a position in the old Bay State, now Washington Woolen Mills, at Lawrence, Mass. He was steadfast in resolution and aim, making his employers' interest his own, and advanced rapidly, passing from the humble position of a section hand in the weave shop to the proud one of agent of the extensive Washington Mills corporation. In 1875 he moved to Dedham and took charge of the Merchants Woolen Mill at East Dedham. Here he remained until 1883 when he went to Worcester, becoming a member of the Kirk, Hutchins & Stoddard of the Auburn Woolen Mills. He remaineduntil January 19, -1895, when he once more moved to Dedham and again assumed charge of the Merchants Woolen Mill. Litchfield, Charlotte Battles, dau. of Henry and Angelina (Greenough) Wardwell; b. in Andover, Mass., 17th. Jan. 1843. When 16 years of age his father sold his farm in Vermont and moved to Andover, Mass. Here he entered the Phillips Academy, and passing through the regular course of studies entered Amherst College, where after two years of study, he went to Union College, N. Y., and graduated in 1860; and in the fall of same year entered the Union Theological Seminary, N. Y. City. Soon after the breaking out of the war he entered the 1st battallion, Massachusetts heavy artillery and was stationed at Maryland Hights. In 1864 he was wounded in the shoulder at the battle of Spottsylvania, which disabled him from active service, and which affected the lung and lead to his death. He was mustered out 23. July 1864. As he had completed his Theological studies, he was licensed to preach by the Third Presbyterians of New York, 16th. Apr. 1866, and in June 1867, he was ordained and installed pastor of the Congregational church of Worthington, Mass. Here he remained until the fall of 1869 when he went to Montello, Wis., and became pastor of the Presbyterian church there, as also of the Church of Buffalo, at the same time supplying the out stations. In 1872 he was advised to change his field of labor, on account of an attack of bronchitis; and in October of that year came to La Porte City, Ia., where he was elected Pastor though not actually installed. In November 1875, he was incapacitated from further service by hemorrhage of the lungs, and although rallying from time to time, gradually failed until death relieved him from his sufferings. 1530. Wm. Gamble[2] (5) (Thomas[1]) b. 1709, came to this country in 1728, aged 19 from Derry Co.,Ireland. He and two elder brothers, Archibald and Thomas, and a sister Mary, started for America, but the elder brothers were pressed into the British service upon the point of sailing, leaving the boy William and his sister Mary to make the voyage alone. William was saved from the press gang by the ready exercise of "woman's wit." The Gambles had started under the protection of Mr. and Mrs. Michael McClintock, who resided in the same neighborhood and were about to emigrate to New England. Upon witnessing the seizure of the elder brothers Mrs. McClintock called to William Gamble "come here Billy, quick," and upon his approaching her, she continued "smuggle down here Billy," and she hid him under the folds of her capacious dress. There he remained in safety until the gang searched the house for the boy in vain, and returned in high dudgeon at their ill success. William Gamble upon his arrival in Boston went to work on the ferry from Charleston to Boston. Here he remained two years, during this time he had no more than supported himself, and he went back in the country and worked at farming several years. At this period he made a visit to Londonderry where he married a widow, Elizabeth Clark. At Londonderry he found a cousin, Archibald Stark and concluded to remain in the neighborhood, according he made "a pitch" upon the west side of the Merrimac, in what is now Bedford, but after a short time, he determined to settle in Chester, and "spotted out" the farm now owned by Archibald Gamble his great-grand son and Isaac C. Flanders Esq. Lots No. 10 and 11 4th. Division, and a corner of No. 12. This was probably about 1733. Here he built a log house upon the east side of the brook that passes through the farm of Samuel Gamble Esq. The path from Namaoskeag Falls, to Londonderry and running by spotted trees, passed near his house, and crossed the Cohas below the Hazletine Mills. Here he resided laboring incessantly upon his farm until the breaking out of the Indian War of 1745. During this war he joined several "scouts," and upon the commencement of the "Old French War," in 1755 having lost his wife, he enlisted in the regular service, and his name appears in Col. John Hart's Regiment, Capt. Alexander Todds' Company. He served during most of the war, was at Ticonderoga, Crown Point, and with Wolf on the "Plain of Abraham." After the fall of Quebec he came to Derryfield and went to work upon his farm, soon after he married Ann, the eldest child of Archibald and Eleanora (Nichols) Stark, and sister to Gen. John Stark of Revolutionary renown. She died 25th. Jan. 1805, age 84 years, having been unfortunately burned with the house then owned by her son Archibald Gamble. At the first meeting after reorganization of the township Derryfield, 23d. Sept. 1751, he was chosen Hayward. He signed the Association Test 1st, June 1776, and died suddenly of cramp colic 28th. Nov. 1785 age 76 years. The will of William Gamble of Derryfield, Hillsboro Co., dated 25 Nov. 1785, states that he was in the 77th. year of his age. Mentions wife Anna, son William, son Archibald, daughter Jennet McClintock, daughter Margaret

Love, and John Stark of Derryfield, appointed executor. Approved and allowed 17th. Oct., 1786.

1535. Janet Gamble[3] (1531) William[2] Thomas[1]) b. m. 12th. Feb. 1760, Alexander son of William and Agnes McClintock. The names of the seven first born children and births are found in the Derryfield town records. William the father of Alexander, was the son of Michael McClintock, whose wife by her presence of mind, saved William Gamble from the press gang. They resided in Derryfield and Hillsboro, N. H. The McClintocks came to Londonderry and finally settled in that part of the town of Chester near Londonderry, now owned by Gen. McQuestion. They were industrious, thriving people and Michael and William his son, built the first bridge across the Cohas, and also another across the little Cohas on the road from Amoskeag to Derry. These bridges were built in 1738, and were probably near where the bridges are now maintained across the same streams on the old road to Derry. The McClintocks were voted 20 S. a year for 10 years for the use of the bridges. The McClintocks moved to Hillsboro, N. H., where their descendants yet reside. The following item is taken from the papers of William S. Curtice kindly sent by Miss N. Velona Curtice. "Michael McClintock and wife in company with William Gamble came to this country in 1722 from Belmorry Antrim County, Ireland. William Gamble was 14 years of age at that time." This agrees with William Gamble's age, but Posster gives 1728 as the year he came to this country.

er. He served during the Revolutionary war under General John Stark, and he was supposd to have been at Bennington, Vt. He received a pension from the United States which commenced 4th. March 1831. He was very fond of hunting and in a swamp on his farm in one winter, he killed nine bears. The swamp to this day is called Bear Swamp. His wife Elizabeth was a very brave woman and a firm believer in the Presbyterian faith, and when she was quite advanced in age, a Methodist minister called on her and tried to convert her to Methodism, she listened to his talk until she concluded she would silence him by going to work. This she did by taking to spinning on the "little wheel" keeping time to its running noise by singing, "I'm a Presbyterian, I'm a Presbyterian, etc." The preacher it is needless to say took his departure. When the old house was burned on the 28th. Jan. 1865, she attempted to get out at the door, but the flames prevented her, then she tried the windows but they were frozen down, then she broke through the glass, sash etc., and threw out the bedding, and lastly her children. Her husband who was sick and feeble she assisted from the house, she then attempted to reach her mother-in-law, Mrs. Ann Gamble's room, but the flames had made too rapid headway in that quarter, she sprang out of the window and tried another door, and was successful in reaching the room, but found the bed empty. In order to save herself from the flames, she caught up a woolen quilt and throwing it over her head and person, in this way escaped with only a few burns. Mrs. Ann Gamble's remains were subsequently discovered and by reason of their location, it was supposed she was making her way to her son's room, but became bewildered and was unable to do so. Had issue only by his wife Elizabeth.

KNOX COUNTY

HISTORICAL AND GENEALOGICAL MAGAZINE.

VOL. 1. August ~~July~~ 1896. No. ~~1~~ 2.0

Subscription Price $1 a Year. Single Numbers 10 Cents.

The Knox County Historical and Genealogical Magazine is the organ of the Knox County Historical society and will be published monthly under the editorialship of Gen. J. P. Cilley.

In the matter of family genealogy Knox county is the most promising field in the whole United States. More family reunions are held in its limits than in any other county, though many in the state are much larger in population and territory.

These reunions and their consequent family pride and family acquaintance are largely due to the compilation of family histories in the work of the late historian, Cyrus Eaton, and constitute the best monument to that eminent teacher and scholar, whose external blindness was compensated by a historical farsightedness, as remarkable as its results are valuable and interesting. The plan is to take up the work as wrought by Eaton, to perfect it and complete it to the present time, to arrange it in the best form approved by the Massachusetts Genealogical society and thus render research in any family easy and accurate. Eaton's arrangement, while concise, was very imperfect and confusing, and any extension of the histories of such families would increase the confusion in geometrican proportions. To give time for a proper compilation of families in alphabetical orders, the genealogy of the Gamble family will be printed in full in consecutive numbers. In this Gamble family both the male and female branches will be given. This will involve much additional labor, but is advisable as the introductory article, to show how wide and far every person's family extends. It is advised that compilers of family genealogies confine themselves to the same name as the magazine intends taking up nearly every family, and in this manner give a full record of both the male and female branches. A large number of persons already possess in written form, genealogies more or less complete, all such persons are urged to bring the material they possess to the editor and have it copied and put in form, and thus more clearly demonstrate in what data and parts it may be deficient. One part of the editorial plan is to interest every school teacher in the matter of encouraging each scholar in their schools of suitable age for such effort, to write up as fully as possible their own families, commencing with their own families, commencing with their grandparents, obtaining and placing in written form all dates of birth, marriage and death, with places of same, residences and occupations of each member and any and all facts of character, attainments, positions held or work performed. All such efforts on the part of the scholars will be the best incentive to and the best possible object lesson in literary composition. It will also interest them in historical effort and historical works, and keep back the tidal wave of cheap fiction which now threatens to engulf the youths and maidens of our land.

Young ladies are the best persons to write up family histories and obtain genealogical data. Such effort is urged upon their attention, with the promise that they will find the work very fascinating and beneficial, as well as enjoyable. They will be surprised at the many local incidents of importance and interest which have transpired in the limits of their own neighborhood and occurred in their own family circle, all of which are living and real, of value and meaning, instead of being visionary and unsatisfactory. The historical endeavor of the magazine will extend over the whole limits of the county and embrace the acts and achievements of her citizens who have gone forth to other sections and other lands. Its special efforts will be the "Preservation of Early Records."

The present movement looking toward the preservation of ancient records—especially town records and records of marriages, births and deaths—is gaining such importance that we beg to call your attention to the condition of the records of your own town. While the present condition of the records themselves may be good, it is evident that their loss, by fire or otherwise, could not be replaced. There is also a constant fading of many records caused by the poor quality of ink used. Many towns have already caused action to be taken in the matter of printing their various records and so preserving the town from future loss, as in the multiplicity of copies there is absolute safety, besides superior facilities for searching.

We urge that your town should deem it wise to take precaution against the destruction of its records, that it would be to your interest to enter into correspondence with us in regard to the printing of the same.

We submit the following proposition: If your town will subscribe for a suitable number of copies of the Knox County Historical and Genealogical Magazine, we will agree to publish full records of them, you to furnish authentic copies from your own town records. These printed records when completed should be carefully preserved to supply the demand for them from citizens who have removed and writers interested in historical and genealogical works, and this demand will in due time reimburse the town, and all advantages of putting your records into accessible and permanent form will be attained at nominal expense. A like record of each town in the county limits will be nearly as valuable as such records of your own town.

To revert again to the genealogical part of the magazine, every person desiring a satisfactory account of his or her family is earnestly requested to examine the record given by Eaton, note any and all errors of dates or names of misstatement of facts and to communicate such corrections at once to the editor. There are many such errors necessarily in every genealogical work and while Eaton has no more than the extent of his work would lead one to expect, the present difficulty is that every compiler will naturally follow Eaton, right or wrong on the dates given, hence the imperative need for some member in every family to verify Eaton's genealogical account and inform the editor whether such account is correct in every particular or not, and if any error to state clearly just what the record should show.

Will you, the reader, respond by return mail or as soon as possible to the following questions?

First: Will you examine carefully Eaton's or Sibley's or Locke's account of your family and ascertain if the facts, names and dates there given are correct?

Second. Will you or some authorized member of your family correct all such errors and communicate such corrections to the editor of the Monthly.

Third. Will you communicate forthwith all changes in the records of your own immediate family since 1865, giving every and all dates of birth, marriages and deaths and in the case of marriages the names of parents of the persons married?

Fourth. Will you or some member of your family communicate to the editor any and all facts of character, occupation, public positions held, property owned or other events appropriate to a biographical record of your deceased relations?

DEAR SIR:—

I enclose ..... dollars, for which I desire you to send .....copies of the Knox County Historical and Genealogical Magazine, to the following address, or addresses.

(Fill out also sign and return both of the following.)

I have examined the histories of Thomaston, So. Thomaston and Rockland, also of Warren and find the following errors and omissions in the account of my family. I also herewith give the following dates of birth, marriage and deaths occuring in my own family and its immediate connections since 1865 and ask attention to the following facts and incidents and achievements of their lives that may be of value to preserve. (Please give all the above desired information fully, using additional sheets as necessary.)

I desire to have the genealogy of my own family appear in the pages of the Knox County Historical and Genealogical Magazine and send herewith all the information I now possess of my ancestry and their descendants. I desire your aid in compiling the same and will give all reasonable assistance in completing its record.

I suggest the following names and addresses of members of my family to whom I advise you to send sample copies of the Magazine to induce them to subscribe for it.

NOTICE.

This copy of the Knox Historical and Genealogical Magazine is sent to you with the purpose and design to interest you in the publication, to obtain your aid in supplying the needed facts concerning your own family and your financial support in subscribing for the same.

Both of these obligations are urged upon your attention as proper and reasonable, and as a thing beneficial to the interests of Knox county, and profitable and valuable, historically, for the record of your own family. If these reasons commend themselves to your good judgment we will continue to send the magazine to your address and expect your subscription. If they do not, we respectfully ask that you return the publication to the editor endorsed "Refused," or as not wanted by you or your family. We are forced to adopt this measure to save the expense and delay of a personal canvass to obtain subscribers.

"The sacred tie of family, reaching backward and forward, binds the generations of men together, and draws out the plaintive music of our being from the solemn alternation of cradle and grave."

EDWARD EVERETT.

"There is a moral and philosophical respect for our ancestors, which elevates the character and improves the heart."

DANIEL WEBSTER.

The articles in the Knox County Historical and Genealogical Magazine have attracted commendation of a high character from the best historical writers. In reply to inquiries we state that the work in book form can only be had by presenting the copies of the magazine for binding, enough copies will be bound by the editor to secure low prices and these bound copies will be exchanged for the issues of the year. The only way to secure copies will be to preserve the numbers as they are issued. Extra copies will be issued to supply numbers that may be lost, and subscribers are guaranteed that their their yearly subscription shall afford them advantages of great value.

A great misapprehension is held concerning the scope of the magazine. It is not limited to the Gamble family. It will include all the families in Knox county, whose members will assist in the compilation of their records. The Gamble family is only given first to show the exhaustive character and accuracy of presentation and as an assurance that the other families shall be as full and perfect, but to attain this object the hearty concurrence of each family must be had; and when had, the work will stand unequalled, and each full copy will grow in value as the coming generations increase the demand for them and the wear of usage diminishes the number in existance.

A certain number of copies will contain inserted portraits of members of families. Every person who thus places a picture in the magazine will obtain a copy containing all the other portraits or pictures inserted. The value and interest afforded by such illustrations will be evident.
